As regards the definition of "clutch," Lissanne (our resident ornithologist) once explained that a clutch is only the eggs that are laid, and the owlets that come out of them are a brood. I think most of us use those terms interchangeably, but I got corrected when I referred to the owlets as a clutch, so I thought I would point that out now just in case Lissanne is reading this. 😊

A clutch is each time the female lays eggs. This is Molly's second clutch. MOD is Molly Obsesive Disorder, meaning we watch them all the time when we can. The basement is when you scroll down below and click on the "More" link, and then keep going, and going and going to read the past chats. Sometimes you can make it to China!

Well, a clutch is a batch of eggs laid 2 days apart until there are enough, meaning from 4 to 10 or so.

MOD is Molly Obsesive Disorder. You can be MOD or Have MOD, or both.

The basement is scrolling down the chat until you see this little word "more", which you then click on and it takes you down even further into chat. that is called going to the basement,

Nice you found us. The cameras go off on the 20th but we'll still be here, and then the cameras will come back on at some point.

Janan yep they had 4 youngsters then they do seem to have changed their delivery system maybe they've reexamined their parenting philosophy or they're into tough love, or the field mice have fled to Nevada or Molly is afraid of the empty nest syndrome or McGee has taken up drinking or the blind snakes are wrapped around Carrie's ankles or... Molly and McGee are lurking and luring the kids to come out and hunt WITH THEM????

They won't hunt on their own until they are out of the box completely. They are both right on time with the last clutch. I got these figures from 'The Owl Box Story' chart on Molly's blog
Hatch date 1st full day out Total days
Max 3/21 5/31 71 days
Pattison 3/23 6/1 70 days
Austin 3/25 6/5 72 days
Wesley 3/28 6/12 76 days
Average from hatch to first full day out of box...72.25
Today, October 13th...
Ashley is 67 days old
Carrie is 66 days old

I intended to check things on the site last night.

I was totally transfixed on the miracle of the miners in Chile, who all escaped after months of being under ground for so long.

A true miracle!.. Nobody ever survived for that length of time in a mining disaster.

They will celebrate Thanksgiving with family and friends. I watched on C.N.N. and Channel 47 (Spanish T.V.)

I sort of lost it, when I viewed the re-union's before my eyes. Count your blessings!...

I've been watching and praying since the start of the rescue and frankly, I'm tired now, but very happy that everything worked out.

It's a short visit, but just wanted to say hello!..

Let's all say some special prayers to the patron Saint of Animals... St. Francis Of Assissi. Pray that our beloved little Carrie gets a treat soon. We all know we are watching Nature, and we keep telling ourselves that, but we also have grown Humanely attached to these two critters. So, let's hope Carrie gets a treat soon... Good nite for now...

Also, I have four smallish parrots. I know that birds will hide any weakness or sickness. They do that so that other birds won't reject them and force them out of their flock, in the wild. So I have to watch my birds closely for signs of possible problems. Knowing this, I think it could be possible that Molly and McGee can sense that Carrie has a problem of some sort, that WE can't see as well. After all, two in this clutch already died. Maybe Ashley is the only totally fit owl in this clutch? Or maybe, since this is a second clutch, maybe Molly and McGee aren't as "gung-ho" about parenting with this clutch?

Carolyn... I am sorry; what in the world are you talking about? I am so confused by this comment and how it relates to Carrie. McGee "hand-delivered" a mouse directly to Carrie just two nights ago. He placed it right in her beak. It was beak to beak and Carlos even took a photo of it. The simple fact is.....Molly and McGee are trying to coax Carrie out of the box and this is the manner in which it is done.

Having a minor teenage crisis here. Trying to get the daughter to focus on studying for a test and all she does is chat on facebook. Unfortunately, she needs the computer for what she was studying. Of course, she bursts into tears for me mentioning it and I am in trouble for making her feel bad. I don't remember being like that. I was much more focused. 😞😞😞😞😞😞

 I'm sending extra special Fairy dust tonight, some for the MODS, and a lot of the 33 that were brought back home, and the six rescue workers, and for the multitude who helped make it possible. It has been a very wonderous day. Well, maybe not for the miner whose girlfriend showed up, but his wife didn't! That will teach him.

 Okay, I know this is nature's way, but it is still hard to watch. In my yard a few years ago, I saw a mother robin shove back her baby that was on the ground...it had tried to fly, but failed. She rejected her baby, because she could see that it had a physical problem. A sick or injured bird draws predators, and that would be dangerous for all. She was protecting herself instinctually, I guess. Anyhow, maybe Molly and McGee sense that Carrie has a problem, and that she/he will never be a successful owl. So MAYBE they instinctually favor Ashley, because she WILL be a successful owl.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The\_Truman\_Show

If you remember the movie, "The Truman Show", they showed lots of footage of Truman-O-D's going thru all the stuff we are. We are caught in a very strange place between voyeurism, scientific study, and admiration of nature at her finest/not? finest.

Not sure I remember anyone had desire to "fling food" in the film, but you get the idea.

HOpe no one is offended by the triumverate I suggest.

I had to re-read her post to find the three things that form her triumvirate: 1. voyeurism, 2. scientific study, and 3. admiration of nature.... No one should be offended, because that's exactly what we are caught up in. Those three things, and sharing them with each other.

Goodnight all. I'm getting a silly little lump in my throat watching Carrie. I have to admire her for flying down and trying to steal the treat from Ashley. Hopefully she'll get fed tonight. I'm pretty sure she's nibbling left overs here and there. Let's remember that big sister Ashley brought Carrie a treat in to the box earlier in the week. I truly believe that the clock is ticking and M&M are doing everything they can to get her out and flying.

I've been enjoying, not only the owlets, but all your comments over the past two months. I note many of you are upset because Carrie seems to get much less food from M&M. Ashley does seem to get more or take more than her share. Let's remember this is the animal kingdom with survival of the fittest at work; also I felt starvation was most likely the cause of the two baby owlets death. My feeling is that Carrier is not the smartest little owl in the tree. Comments anyone ...

Well y'owl, guess I'll call it a night. It was a very interesting one at that and some certain someones did provide comic relief for a while during the lull. We really can't take some comments to heart cause as a whole this is a wonderful site with great people and no one can take that away from us. Always remember sweets.....be especially kind to yourselves and each other. And Carrie, don't you take any bullying from Ashley cause some day you will be rich and famous like your mommy. 😊😄

I'm getting really tiked off at both Molly and McGee, and especially Ashley's actions, its like she doesn't want Carrie to have any of the treats. why doesn't Molly or McGee bring a back up treat for Carrie when Ashley flies off with hers!!Can't they see shes trying ,but Ashley always gets the treat.. Not fair, not fair at all!!!! Ashley always gets the food first, then Carrie gets frustated and retreats back into the owl box!! She does all the calling for treats and gets nothing in return for all of her effort!!!

For those of you that are more educated than myself in the way of the owl, are M&M favoring Ashley since there are only 2 & they consider Ashley to be the strong one? I can not detect a reason for Carrie being rejected especially since all 4 in the last clutch were well fed.

Sandy in my opinion I don't think M & M are deliberately not providing for Carrie. It seems when they deliver Carrie is in the box and Ashley grabs the treat 1st. If I remember correctly, recently the treat was given to Carrie and Ashley stole it away. The problem is not Mom and Dad, but greedy sis/bro.

If Mount Ranier erupted and a lahar came down the mountain, would Gig Harbor, WA survive? I may have once had relatives living in Gig Harbor, but our most recent common relative may have died around 1834. Most of them lived in CO and NM until the late 1800s or early 1900s. One old boy lived to be 91, outliving his nephew (my great-grandfather), whereas my uncle is the oldest in history in my lineage at age 86 this year. My grandfather passed through Vancouver, WA or nearby Washugal for a few years back around the turn of the century.

Maybe there's something wrong with Carrie, and M & M know it....and that's why they aren't feeding the "weakest" one??? Speculation? I really have no idea, but doesn't that happen in nature?

Could be, but I think right now their parent brains are just saying "bring food to hungry owls." I don't think they keep track of who gets what.

And they both seemed genuinely sincere in there welcome and hugs.

Re-posting this from last night - Here is something lissanne posted the other day which might reassure those who are worried about Carrie. I don't think she would mind me re-posting it as long as I give her credit.

Look not only at the pictures but also at the changes in body weight of the owlet. It's losing weight at this point in life. Whereas it might be loss of 'baby fat' there is evidence that the extra weight might actually be retained water. At this stage of the game, the owlet stays hydrated even as it's losing weight.

I'm going to miss these owls, and all of the good folks who have been so loyal in tracking their activities. What a wonderful experience! I hope Carlos will turn the cameras back on for the late winter clutch, but if not, I'll always appreciate this experience.

Is it possible that Molly or McGee realize how little food Carrie has had of late or do they just bring food and that's all they are really aware of. If they are aware would they make a special effort to see that Carrie gets some, assuming it is possible to get it past Ashley. Maybe wait til Ashley does a fly about for example.

And I'll make a comment about the sales pitches: If you think it's bad now, it's only going to get worse over the course of the next week. It's Carlos' right to promote his "stuff". If you don't like it or don't want to listen to it, there's still time to opt out of watching the last 6 days. JR*SUMMARY

In summary, to produce phototoxic retinopathy, or permanent damage, a focused intense light must be held in one location on the retina for a time several magnitudes greater than the duration of a camera flash. Fill-flash is not likely to have any effect on visual systems; flash as main light in dim light conditions may produce a temporary reduction in vision but not permanent damage. Flash on nocturnal subjects during nighttime should be used sparingly due to brief impairment of vision.

Points to consider: Carolos mentioned that car lights coming around the curve affect the box, and that the neighbor's tail lights also flash the box when neighbor back's from driveway. It's Wednesday night. The SAME thing happened last Wednesday night from 7-8, keeping Carrie cowering in the owl box. Could there be Wednesday night activities, like church meetings, causing this situation? Just a thought.

I don't even like to acknowledge the negative comments but I do want to say something about the flash. First of all, Carlos consulted an owl expert during the first clutch and he was told the flash does not bother them at the distance he has the camera. Also, not all the 'flashes' we see are from a camera. Carlos has said numerous times that when cars go down his street (I think he's in a cul-de-sac), the headlights sometimes shine on the box. The owls are fine or else M & M would not have continued there. They know better than us what makes a good home for their owlets. 😊

I've never been concerned about the flash. When you think of the hundreds and hundreds of photos Carlos has taken through the 1st clutch and 2nd clutch (many which we have not seen), I have never seen more than a brief reaction when they might look toward the source of the light at times from any of the owls. I'd rather focus on the more positive things happening with the owls and in the chat. Let's just smile and be happy 😊

Yesterday evening Carrie was in and out of the owl box quite a bit and flew all over the playground. She is actually getting pretty good at it. She just has a different style than Ashley. The outside camera was down much of the night, but for the part that where it was up these are last nights stats from the other chat. They believe Carrie got a delivery.

7:07 tresbien: KOWL Food & Fly Factz Treats 3: After blocking the doorway Ashley got 2 treats and Carrie 1; information incomplete due to cam being offline.

Good evening all my fellow MODS! First time on tonight, its about time for all the action to start. I see Carrie is thinking about coming out, has she already been out tonight? I see Ashley has been on a few fly abouts, but comes back to the photo ledge in hopes of getting that first delivery and keeping Carrie form getting it./ Hope our little Miss Carrie gets a chance at some real food tonight! That Carrie is quite a squawker, she needs to knock big sis out of the way, and get that first incoming treat first!! Going to lurk for awhile and then go nighty nite early.. Haven't been getting alot of sleep lately with all of my Drs. appointment and then Cats to the vet the last two mornings for their shots. going to try and sleep in in the morning. Hope you all have a good evening!! I hope Carrie gets some food for all that squawking she's doing!! She' deserves an a plus for all of her effort she puts out 😊 in calling for treats!! 😊😊😊😊

For those experts here who think a flash doet NOT bother a barn owl...please read the study on it and how the flash can blind them for up to 30 minutes. They are NOT use to flashes and it can disrupt their feeding. It would be like you and me being in the dark and then having a flash go off in your eyes. You can't see a thing after that flash. The flash can also cause them to crash land since they can't see from the flash. Read from the experts. I feel Carlos is the one causing carrie to not get food and the parents to not bring a lot of food. Remember how many times one of the owls crashed landed...funny how it was right after Carols snapped a picture.

Someone on the other chat just said that Carlos uses IR (infrared) flashes. I had never heard that before, but if that were true, then they certainly wouldn't bother the owls.

Today, 19:44:22 - Flag - Like - Reply

Karen in Sebring (Happy and Content)

Yes, he does use infrared at night. He mentioned today that he wasn't sure if there would be enough IR to take a photo of an owl on the ladder in the bottom left hand corner. James, if I'm wrong about this please let me know because I don't want to mislead people. Thanks.

The camera flash is NOT IR. Only the video cameras and their lights are IR. The camera flash is a standard Canon flash. It does put out a some IR - all regular lights/flashes put out IR - but it is designed to put out regular visible light. That is the only way to get a image with his camera.

I was surprised to see that too and questioned it, and they said they had "heard it". That was why I didn't state it was TRUE, just that IF it were. It was probably a misunderstanding on their part. Thanks for your info JH. I am not experienced in photography.

It gets stressful watching all this yet the first clutch really came out ok... the difference with this second clutch is that they have been left alone so often... Molly did not spend the time with these two because it was so hot in the box... it does look like they are really doing ok because if they were not they really would have trouble flying.... us "Old MODS" have had to take a deep breath (I pray) and hope they both will be off to the palms within a few days...

Even the study you posted is inconclusive. You also have to remember, the night vision cameras make the flash look brighter than it really is.

Your assumption that Carlos' flash is the cause of Carrie not feeding is deceiving. Flash, therefore, no food deliveries. There are so many factors at play here - seasonality, prey availability, owl temperament, etc. Geewiz. If the flash is the cause of no deliveries, therefore, Ashley should also be starving.

Taken from the article itself!

"I have flash photographed captive owls and they seem to be undisturbed, but they will even stare straight into a photoflood light, which must eradicate any dark adaptation and leave them functionally blind for a couple of minutes. Therefore this is not a good indication of whether photographic lights will disrupt natural behaviours."

Taken from the same article:

"I heard from a well known bird photographer (name withheld for the protection of the guilty) that they set up some flash units to photograph an owl returning to its roost in a church spire. The bird tripped the infra-red beam on approach and the photographer got one of those shots to die for. The owl had its wings fully extended, exposure and focus were perfect. But the owl crashed into the stonework at some considerable speed and fell to the ground badly injuring itself. Obviously the flash dazzled and/or frightened the bird to the point that it could no longer see well enough and/or was too jittery to land safely."

The article contradicts itself. It did not state the parameters where the flash units were fired upon. Sounds like they were very upclose (since the names were withheld to protect the guilty).

Overall, it wasn't a very scientific study. I don't believe every blog on the internet.

we would have to put a MR. before there name. 😊😊

If you are on SPO, you are "watching" both OB1 + OB2. But you could have logged directly onto the OB1 site and not onto the OB2 site and vice versa. I think that prob accounts for the difference.

They actually planned it this way. The Chileans are really into numerology. Once they realized it was possible, they made every attempt to get them all out on this day. I heard this on the news. Several other 33's and 13's play into it as well.

I think there was something in the chat earlier today about that. I think it was when the 13th miner was coming up. There must have been a comment on the news about whether there were any suspicions about bringing up the 13th and they said "No" - it was 10-13-10 and that added up to 33 and that was a good sign.

I want to watch the owlets pounce around now and wait for a delivery, but I have to give my head/eyes a rest. I don't remember the last time I had a headache, it's been many months! That's right Darlene. We have a choice to watch or not watch this site and Carlos has afforded us the opportunity to watch for free. The equipment has cost him a lot of money so I think we can at least be patient while he talks to us about some of the products that have been made of the owls. I don't know if some of you are aware of this but it has been the viewers who have asked for these products such as DVDs, jewelry, books, signs, bumper stickers, etc. so he has only done what we've asked. For those of you who don't like the prices of the products you don't have to order them. I have ordered them and love them. Just saying.

I had such a lousy day today, then I realized it is the 13th. My daughter called with some trouble with her pregnancy (I'm hoping it isn't too serious). Then I went to get a flu shot and backed into a parked car and dented their bumper. I am waiting for the person to contact me. I just hoped to watch the owlets for a while. Hey, I will pause OB1 and watch OB2. That ought to do it!

Thank God for the mute button. I guess they need to get all their stuff sold before the 20th. These owls really became a good profit maker for them. Evening is the best time for them to sell stuff as most are watching now in hopes of seeing Carrie finally get some food.

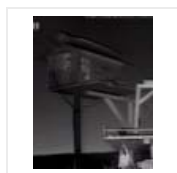

I was going to buy something from them but when it came to the final price they added $5.00 for inflation. So decided I really didn't need the item. Don't like seeing one price and then getting an extra charge at the end.

The biggest thing that bothers me are the earthquakes, they have been through several and Chile is right in that Pacific Ring of Fire. I am just amazed that they have only had to use the one cage. TruLy a MiRaCULOUS MiRACLE! 68 to 69 days, in the ground in a dessert over 2,000 feet down, the stats are just ... no words.

The engineering and careful planning of this rescue are simply awe-inspiring to me. Hubby just explained something that I hadn't even thought of- they had to design the capsule so that it was capable of being entered, closed and secured by a single man, because in the end, there will be only one man left down there, and he will have to do it alone. Also, they built an escape hatch in the bottom, so that the men could get out of something went wrong.

It seems like they planned so carefully for every contingency. It is an amazing accomplishment - helped along by the grace of the universe, IMHO.

I think the escape hatch feature was one of the reasons that they sent up some of the healthiest men first. They knew those men would be physically and emotionally able to handle the stress of having to get themselves back down that hole if there was a problem.

While I/we wait for the last miner to come up (certainly before first treat delivery), I had read earlier today when I peeked in that OB2 was down for quite awhile in the early morning hours, when there is record of quite a few treats being delivered during that time. Can we not assume that Carrie and/or Ashley were fed during that time frame, instead of the opposite that no more treats were delivered since we couldn't see it?

I'm sure that may have been discussed at some point today, but I wasn't around to read it.

I said it early today when the cam was down. Since we couldn't see it, I think we should go with the theory that Carrie got all the rodents, and is now very well fed. I wonder if people would see her differently if they were told she had eaten.

She looks healthy and strong to me, but I'm not an expert in owls. I just think she looks fine, sounds fine, and seems to be learning more every day.

I'm sorry, but I'm getting worried about Carrie. I've kept my mouth shut till now, but since Ashley is getting all the treats, I'd throw some rodents into the box.

How can she get tough and defend her food, then she's weak? 🙄

I know all this, as I've been watching. On the scale, Ash has got 90% if not more of the treats. Carrie needs more than one rodent every 3 days to survive is all I'm saying.

If I may butt in, I thought she sounded weak last night/this morning, with a less than vigorous squawk, even though right next to the microphone. She doesn't seem to fly around as much as Ashley, but seems to be strong enough to do so. I think a large rodent every other day would be enough for both owlets, if they were sharing, but I have been going on something I read here on this site that adult owls normally eat two rodents a night and sometimes 4 or 5, depending on size of prey. It appears that Ashley may not have eaten an entire rodent since Friday. Not being an expert, just began viewing the first clutch in March, my thoughts are that Carrie should be eating more if she is going to survive. I think Carrie would be eating more if Ashley was already fledged and out of the box, and not taking away the food deliveries M&M are bring to Carrie.
 Today, 17:48:39 – Flag – Like – Reply

Diane

You are correct on that Carrie, NOT Ashley hasn't eaten an entire rodent since Friday. Ashley has eaten a lot since Friday. Carrie is struggling. What kills me is Ashley looked after her when she fell and tried to help, but when it comes to food, Ash wants it all o.o

You are correct. Just before daylight a treat was delivered and it looked like Carrie was the one to get it. She went almost to the back of the box and was eating something but we could not see what it was. You could tell it was her because she has more of the fuzzy feathers.

Diane, these are wild owls. At this point in an almost-grown Barn Owl's life, each owl is responsible for getting its own share of the food that has been delivered. It may sound harsh by human standards - indeed, it is harsh, but this is the way life is in the wild. Human intervention would upset the delicate balance of their existence.

And Lynda - I have always lived in climates that have bitter cold winters. When I was young living in Switzerland, particularly in the Alps, I don't remember suffering from the cold. Of course we always had long johns on as a matter of standard apparel. It may have something to do with age, as you say.

Dear Francis, I'm so sorry. I along w/ many others here have lost our pets. I lost another just a couple of months ago. It's just soooooo hard each time. Time does heal...but it doesn't make it easier. I was mentioning below that my mailman told me it was time now for me to rescue another. It's so hard to make that step, remembering the pain of losing the last. My heart is w/ you. James Herriott (UK veterinarian and author) has always said to get another animal no later than two weeks from losing the last. I have usually waited at least two months. Can't replace them, but it does bring a new soul in to your life to share. God bless you and your memories of your companion (his spirit is still w/ you as you know)... Lots of love and healing hugs, Susan I feel your pain and loss.... xo

I find these miners and their wives to be very reserved. I wonder if it's a natural state for them, or if it's more related to the trauma they have been thru? I think here in the U.S., they would have to hold the families back. These women stand there and act so calm. I am in awe of them.

Becky, I think, too, that too much has been made of it. The media has picked it up and run with it. The term "mistress" evokes intrigue and mystery that we read about in books set in the 1700's and 1800's. Probably more than one of them has been unfaithful to their spouse. Here in the States we probably all know at least one person who has a "girlfriend" on the side, but it is not news "fodder".

Absolutely, Lynda. And I'd like to know who called this woman his "mistress". Was it he? Was it CNN? "Mistress" carries connotations that "girlfriend" does not. I find it unconscionable that thinking adults will pass judgement on this situation without any facts whatsoever. And as others are saying, what might not be tolerated here culturally or ethically might in fact be routinely tolerated elsewhere. In western Europe, "mistresses" have been a fact of life since time in memoriam, and do not cause even a ripple in public opinion. I am not taking sides on the issue, merely observing reality.

That was the point of my question. Is it cultural, or situational? I know what Americans would do, and I am not saying it's right, it's just different. I don't know what is right...well, I do know asking both your wife and mistress to be there is NOT right, but the reactions. I know they are genuine and I wasn't questioning that. It's just the reserved nature of the display. Do you get what I am saying?

It doesn't help to have the media and cameras and the whole world watching. I wish it could be more private for them. Also who knows what state of mind each miner is in when they get pulled out. Just think of the millions of things that are going through their heads. And how happy they are to be alive and OUT!!! What is the first thing they want to eat? Thank God they will be all out in a few more hours.

I know. But it's a country celebrating their success in bringing them out alive. So there won't be anything about their lives for a while that is personal. Unfortunate for all of them. Their lives will never be the same again! It would be nice if there was a tent they could go to with family for just a few minutes..alone..without cameras.

And they will, Roni. Arrangements have been made after the necessary medical check-up for them to have private time with their families. It's not unlike the return of the astronauts or the release of prisoners held by terrorists - they need that medical evaluation first and their wives and girlfriends know that. I'm sure it is hard on them, but, at least they know they have returned safely.

They were advised ahead of time what the procedure would be, but I agree they wouldn't be able to hold them back here. I can see the anxiety, fear and anticipation in their faces though. Although greetings by family is brief when they come out of the capsule, they know that they will have private family time as soon as the initial medical check up is given.

There is also the fact that, while there was never any guarantee that they would get out alive, there has been a live feed, so they have not been completely cut off. That and the cultural differences and the careful debriefing and care that is being taken may have an effect on the emotional appearance of the miners and families.

Once I was driving some teachers to lunch and one in the backseat commented that there were two choices back there of tapes. One was Beethoven and the other was Patsy Cline! 😊 Anyone heard of Eddie Arnold? We had an Open Air Theater then & he and his group came thru. I recited a little poem on stage that night. "Little fly upon the wall. He ain't got no home at all. He ain't got no mom to come his hair. He don't care. He ain't got no hair." Anyhow, Eddie Arnold came to the back afterwards and picked me up high in the air. (I'm getting sillier & sillier. Time to get these babes fledged!)

From what I understand, for both religious and financial reasons, divorce in Chile is a difficult thing (not as easy as the U.S.), and therefore, mistresses are not unheard of. I'm not sure if that was his wife, mistress, or.... I never heard a confirmed report. The only thing I heard was that the Chilean news reported it as 'espouse', could have been either one (although there were reports that the wife declined being there). Did anyone else notice that the miner seemed somewhat 'withdrawn' from the woman who met him- she stroked his face, he didn't even give her a

'peck' til close to the end of their greeting each other! Bet he will get lucrative offers for his 'story'!! Too funny! 😊

There is an Amish or Mennonite or Quaker or whoever saying, "My house is clean enough to be healthy, yet dirty enough to be happy." 😊 I guess that means I'd better save more doggies (allergic to cats) to be happier. I'm down to one doggie. I'm used to three....poor me... My mailman recently told me that it's time for me to get out there and rescue another dog, "...that I have so much love to give..." From what I understand, I've got MOD Too, there was a company from Houston that had the equipment in the area, that worked with the Chileans on their "plan B", which was the first to drill through, and is the one being used. The Chileans also had a 'plan A' and 'plan C' - they had multiple plans, took info and ideas from around the world, incorporated much of it, and just had a "let's get it done" attitude. I didn't hear of 'politics' or a lot of quarreling... Good for them!! There will be a celebration around the world for this effort tonight, I think! 😊😊😊

It was nice to hear their president admit to a global audience that the mine should never have been open and operating, given the poor safety record, and take responsibility where the mining company failed. Too many times all we hear are people saying that investigations will take place.

Yes, JH, the mine had severe enough safety infractions that they should not have been operating... as so many mines across the world have, including the U.S. It also shows some character in their President, that he has been there, greeting most of the miners personally - he is right there!!

I'm sure, Annemarie, that there is some exponent of 'politics' involved with the fact that the President of Chile is there throughout, I also have the impression, from watching the 'nuances' (as EFS puts it) of his behavior, that he is genuinely and actually pleased to be there to greet those miners - just my take on it. I just really feel that the Chileans have done an excellent job again, and deserve full credit for their efforts. I remember the earthquake they had recently - as they aren't a third world country and have high standards, they had minimal catastrophic results, and although many countries offered assistance, they declined - said all was okay, they could handle it. A very proud people - just my thoughts! 😊

Of course he is proud of the recent accomplishments, and he knows that good press can only help his country, but I sense that his concern and emotion are true. He seems very connected with the people.

Hello Mod friends. Well... I suppose you all have heard by now that we had an earthquake in Oklahoma today. It was at 9:08 am that we felt it here in the Tulsa area. My husband and I were at our computers and we both felt our chairs rock. I was not sure what it was but my husband ( from CA ) knew immediately that we had just had an earthquake. That is not something that you expect to feel in the middle of the US, but I have been told that we have a major fault running thru here.

Caught Carlos just in time to hear everything going on. It will be sad when the cameras go off. Of course we all know it can't last forever, but we love these sweet little owls and so we will miss them. I hope Molly & McGee stay around & have more babies next year. It would be so cool if we could all meet again in the spring!!

Enjoying the peacefulness of a daytime owl box... glad I missed the squabble, but figure it was because Miss Ashley is such a greedy little pig. Hopefully Carrie got something when OB2 was offline this morning and we couldn't see what was happening.

Barb...I read that. Thank you for what you posted. I asked the chat room last night about including the entry about the rescue, and I received overwhelming support. Except for one person. I decided this morning to go with my heart. If someone has a problem with it, they don't have to read it. Our time left with the owls is short, and I am not going to let a few posts ruin it for me! With a carefully placed head butt and the right amount of leverage, Carrie may just launch Ashley right *off* that photo ledge.

I must get busy on the homework. Thanks for the info about the camera. Another question/s: If by chance Ashley and Carrie do not fledge by the 20th, will there be a way we can find out the progress? Has Carlos stated that he may update the chat? I know they are going out of town...so it may be we never know??? (If they both don't fledge by the 20th.) Thank You again!

It's true that we might have to wait a very long time to find out their fledge progress (if they don't fly the coop by said date) but Carlos will almost definitely update his Molly Blog with any info whether it's from him or an owl sitter.

That and other similar terms, francie. - "One month of summer and 11 months of winter sometimes" 😊. Winter weather does seem very long sometimes; with snow usually starting sometime in November and often into early April, many days that don't even get above freezing temps and many many nights that are well below zero. But Spring, Summer and Fall are gorgeous here.

The box was crowded in the first brood. So basically the first owlet to roost away from the box had good reason to do so. After that, the other owlets had a sibling to follow to the new roost at sunrise, so maybe it was more a case of monkey see, monkey do?

Just a thought I have been having - Ashley seems to get most the food from what we can tell and Carrie continues to do her best with what she is given - Here's my thought - Carrie could prove to be hardier in the wild than Ashley because of the way things have gone with the food. Ashley has not had a hungry day as opposed to Carrie. Carrie may be better equipped to survive. Like I said, just a thought.

Oddly enough, I've felt two tremors here. One was 30 yrs ago and the other a few months back. I had experienced a small jolt when I lived in CA so I knew the sensation. Sure enough, the paper confirmed it the next day. Apparently they happen every where but you rarely feel them.

Here is a site that i go to check on earthquakes, that was one of my biggest worries on the Chilean rescue because they are right in the PACIFIC RING OF FIRE. Hope all suffered no damage. Go check out the 30 day quake chart in any given area, this does not show the really small ones, it is truly amazing to realize our earth's surface is in constant motion, below and above. Stay safe.

Ok, here's my contribution to the snow pictures, and it's about as much (or as little!) as Rhonda's. This, however, was taken on Christmas Day 2009, and has the distinction of being the only snowfall on Christmas Day in Dallas, Texas, in recorded history. This is the snowfall on our Japanese maple.

 OK...I'm gonna ask again...I presume no one saw my question below.
 I saw the posted pic of Carrie getting a treat from McGee and looke at the blog...it's in the Oct. 11 pics.

Does this mean Carrie had food that night? I guess it's possible we missed it. But, I saw last night several people say that she hadn't eaten in two days (and last night would've made three).

Please help me to understand. I'm not trying to be difficult...just want to know what's right.

Today, 11:49:35 – Flag – Like – Reply

in-suf-fer-a-ble

The real question was did she keep a hold on the food, or did Ashley take it away from her?

Both were in the box, and it was about impossible to tell who had it and ate it. We had a very limited view and there was a lot of excitement with the owlets, so anything is possible there.

being without food doesn't worry me as much as that is where they get their liquids too....so dehydration bothers me....don't know what she's eaten when we can't see her, but haven't seen anything that makes me think she's eaten in at least 2 days, maybe 3.....I know, nature is perfect and all that, but still worry a bit.

There has been information posted here that seems to indicate that dehydration is not as big a concern as some make it out to be. The research suggested that the owlets naturally stockpile extra fluids, possibly as a strategy to cope with hot nesting conditions. The extra weight they put on before they begin fledging is mostly water weight. I think the situation would be worse if they were in heat stress every day, which they have not.

Rhonda...I, myself, think that Carrie got the food. There are a lot of opinions, and that is mine. Both owlets were in the box when the food was brought in. Some say that Carrie got it at the door, then Ashley took it away from her. I thought Carrie got it and ate it. But it is so hard with the camera angle and no color of the inside camera, to tell. I may be wrong!! Just my opinion. I still think that Carrie is fine! She was flying around last night, and was active. She is progressing at her own rate, not ours or Carlos'. They owlets don't know the cameras are going dark, and the world is waiting for them to leave the box for good!!

Looks like a bad 'hair' day up front. 😊 They both look beautiful and healthy. I have no worries about their feedings. Carrie is learning that food doesn't come easy. Ashley might actually be at a disadvantage in this area because she's not had to wait. The lower number of feedings have forced Carrie out of the box too. M & M are being great parents and doing what their instincts tell them to do for each owlet. What a joy to watch these owls growing and learning!

Kristi they shut everything down around here on a flurry also, and for good reason. Neither the state nor the drivers are equipped to handle snow. But, ironically perhaps, our worst case scenario is when we get just a dusting. I spent half the night sitting in complete gridlock in Raleigh due to about half an inch of snow that started falling in mid-afternoon. It was chaos. The schools closed and sent buses out then immediately called them back. No one could go anywhere, and the state couldn't salt roads. The kids spent the night at school and half of my office spent the night at work, with most of them living less than 5 miles away. Once I was able to get away from the city, it was smooth sailing the next 50 miles.

Well I need to run (OK...roll, I use a wheelchair)...and get some thing done around the house. I also need Jade to get crackin' on school work. She has a guitar lesson at 3 and needs to finish math and English before then.

Have a good day....I'll peek in from time to time.

Love you all!

Still have some annuals left. Also morning glories, that I can't get rid of. We keep yanking them out, and they come back every year. They totally can cover the fence. Love them, but not on this fence.

Lissanne: Thanks for your words. I had gotten my back up and ears back expecting a lecture about Wikipedia regurgitations. Anyway, here's a friendly FYI. My dad was a noted organic geochemist. I was raised, weaned and otherwise brought up with science. There's also a trace of Ozark mountain woman left in me from my early days in Fayetteville. "Don't take nuthun' offa nobody nohow."

The main Wiki article about Owls mentions the vision issue while the Barn Owl article does not. I'm assuming that the vision issue is species specific, not family wide. The comment about Molly's care for Carrie's eyes is apt. Also, they can find the toe jams seemingly without much problem. So it seems fair to say that Barn Owls have better overall vision than some other species of owl. Cheers!

That's the size I have. I need a new "oval" one...the round one is too deep for me to lift it anymore due the Psoriatic Arthritis (I get Brad or Jade to do it now). One thing...if you put cold food in make sure the crock is cold too...if you are going to put warm or hot food in warm the crock first too. It helps the cooking times to work out better.

Preheat oven to 350. Wash 5-7 lb roaster. Melt 1/2 stick butter in 1/2 cup orange juice. Salt cavity. Cut up apples and stuff in cavity. Pour 1/2 the melted mixture into the cavity, the other half over the top of the chicken. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. About 3 hours. (I hadn't "saved" it, but wrote it out on a post-it!

Going to add my 2 cents here. I'm glad to see the note about the first miner in the stats, especially the stats that will be saved to the wiki. I don't think we were or are celebrating the saving of one like over another or that one life is more important than another. None of us are insensitive to or lessening the loss of so many other lives around the world in other situations. The elation felt in the chat last night will not be saved in a pdf to the wiki as was done on other occasions of heroic rescues and events. I hope, too, that the time and date that the last person is brought to the surface is noted in the stats including the two who had the courage, at risk to their own lives, to go down there to monitor the miners and coordinate effort there.

I'm afraid I would miss the changing seasons if I lived where it was warm all the time. I always look forward to spring, summer, fall (my favorite) then winter. I don't really like to travel in the winter - some people never learn how to drive on snow and ice and won't slow down. Loved Florida the few times I have been there and I know it is beautiful there all the time. I know my neighbors go to Florida for January - April. Then I get to worry about their cattle getting fed (their son-in law is suppose to care for them). I keep an eagle eye out. Always worry about the animals.

Ok. This isn't snow related but ran across it looking for the other picture. This deer was about 20 feet from our house out front. We took it through the window. She was eyeing up my black-eyed-susans that are against the house. They ate all my black-eyed-susans and cone flowers out back before I ever saw a flower.

The article did say little to nothing about near versus far vision, but the MODs observations are pretty decisive on near vision. One question I have is whether the owl near vision is as acute as their far vision or is it slightly blurred.

works about the same. Mine looks like a little roaster, but have used a crock pot before too. Both work fine.

one tip is to brown any meat before slow cooking it in a recipe.

That is a GREAT tip!!! Brown that roast on both sides first.

I was going to say brown any meat...even chicken before you put it in...it doesn't hurt to saute onions, celery, and garlic before you add them...they will release their sweetness and you'll get that yummy caramelization (dyslexic...forgive spelling) to boot. Also, try adding freshe herbs right at the end (even just parsley)...it'll make your roast or chicken dish a "fresh-cooked" flavor. I only use dried herbs for the main cooking and then the fresh only at the end. Hope these tips help. 😊
 I'm making notes on other tips too... I collect recipes. 😊

I've never heard the term "quill pig" but apparently that is more common here in the Northeast. Very important, scientific information in this link

I saw a big flock feeding on all the drops under an old apple tree beside the road just down the street from us late yesterday afternoon. No camera with me, of course 😞. We never saw wild turkeys here in Maine when I was growing up. They were reintroduced to Southern Maine several years ago and have proliferated and spread North very quickly.

Thanks, lissanne, a very good point. Always like your insight and information !! BTW, I've decided to use the correct term of "kestrel" now. But, probably will still call a porcupine a "quill hog" though 😊

This would have been my first time to try it. It doesn't sound difficult, just takes a long time. Next year I hope I'll be able to try it!
