My thoughts go out to all of the people/animals affected by the recent oil disaster in the Gulf... Being that it has now reached the shores, there is growing concern that this will have a much larger environmental impact on the surrounding wildlife (2 National Wildlife Refuges are located right on the shore), which includes birds, than the Exxon Valdez spill.

As I watch our peaceful (kind of...lol) brood here tonight, my thoughts go to those many animals that will perish at the hands of human "interference". My hope is that they can get a cap on the oil soon, so that many lives are lost or affected.

Namaste.

Ok. I'm heading off to bed now. Just before that last delivery I was standing at the door about to take the dog out for her walk, and when I heard the commotion, I made the dog wait by the door until Molly left before I would take her out. Poor neglected doggie! I have MOD!!

Several days ago, someone asked "What did they call barn owls before there were barns?" Everyone gave names like what you have above, except me. I thought I was being witty when I replied something like, "Cave owl, lean-to owl, hole in the tree owl." All these places were before there were barns. Get it? Ha ha! I was late replying so I don't think anyone saw it. That, or no one thought it was funny except me! 😊

It would be fun to dig through really old references to the owls. Of course, in many lands, barns were around longer than writing.

My understanding is there are nestlings, which stay in the nest, and fledglings, which comes after nestlings, and is when the birds move beyond the confines of the nest.
 Max should fledge, or step out of the nest for the first time, 10 days or so from now.
 Fledging will last one to two months. And then he'll fly away for good.
 If he steps out now, I fear for his life!

Actually the original camera has an infrared light on it and it was on earlier this evening. Carlos used to leave it on when we viewed inside the box at night, but now that we watch through the door, the viewing is better with it off. The other infrared cameras don't have a light, but sometimes benefit from the extra light that one provides.

I work with a barn owl at a wildlife center. And Barn owl breath is awful! But not as bad as falcon breath. And they dont get fleas. They can get bird mites, but only if they are sick and spend a lot of time on the ground.

My daughter is into acting and so we went as a family thing to do and all fell in love with it. We like the atmosphere, the town, the backstage tours, the special talks about the plays, etc. And it isn't just Shakespeare, but other "classics" as well. I'd encourage anyone who likes theater to go at least once, even if it's far away.

A TIME TO FLY

Our owls are growing larger every day
With feathers almost ready for the sky.
How can we keep their urge to fly at bay
Until we're sure the time is right to try?

Alas this is a daily trial for all,
The owls and Watchers Loyal all alike!
We hold our breaths in case we see a fall,
Concerned for each and every little tyke.

One day too soon our Maxie will embark
To try her strength upon the fragile breeze;
Her wings will spread against the sky so dark,
Then siblings, one by one, their night to seize.

Away they'll fly and take our hearts along
Upon their wings: a laugh, a cry, a song.

I'm reposting one I wrote at 4:00 this morning when I woke up from dreaming of Molly and her brood! lol

Four little fluffers
snuggled in a box
safe from rain and wind
even when it rocks.

Molly is their mom
outside in a tree
sleeping through the day
but close, to hear and see.

In the dark of night
when the sun goes down
dad comes to call
McGee's back in town!

Silently they hunt together
and return with furry treats
for the noisy, hungry owlet's
it's all "good eats!"

All around the world
hearts have come together
as we watch our favorite family
we are "birds of a feather!"

Celeste, my reading tells me that owls have neither smell nor taste. They will swallow their prey whole when possible, hence they do not savor tastes. I believe they do recognize one prey as being preferable to another, but because of satiety and nutritional value.

Today, 19:13:03 - Flag - Like - Reply

Owlosaurus

Interesting question, since they say they have to sense of smell. But they seem to relish rabbits and gophers. Mmmm... gopher relish....

Maybe they are just reacting to larger prey because it has more food value or more 'juicy insides' value?

(Watching them spread their wings this afternoon and seeing how their feathers have developed inspired me to write this new sonnet.)

A TIME TO FLY

Our owls are growing larger every day
With feathers almost ready for the sky.
How can we keep their urge to fly at bay
Until we're sure the time is right to try?

Alas this is a daily trial for all,
The owls and Watchers Loyal all alike!
We hold our breaths in case we see a fall,
Concerned for each and every little tyke.

One day too soon our Maxie will embark
To try her strength upon the fragile breeze;
Her wings will spread against the sky so dark,
Then siblings, one by one, their night to seize.

Away they'll fly and take our hearts along
Upon their wings: a laugh, a cry, a song.

This is a REPOST from Tuesday:

Reposting a couple of "flight lesson" videos I found earlier today....if you're interested.

This might be similar to what we will get to see with our little brood... 😊

And you're doing a marvelous job, I might add. Makes me feel like a little slacker.

I certainly hope no one reads that the wrong way. LOL

Thanks for the laugh earlier, also. We actually exchanged a few emails and it turns out she read my poem here and was apparently amused enough by it that she had to write and tell me. Of course I misread her tongue-in-cheek remarks as being offended at first, so the conversation turned out to be quite humorous. I'll write another piece of prose later to sum it all up.

It's funny to me how you just try and amuse everyone, but every so often someone just gets ticked off like out of the blue. I just stay out of those.... I don't want to get velled at. I would just cry 😞.

Thanks for the compliment on the wiki. I started a blog in January and it really helped me figure out HTML to be able to do some of the things I wanted to do on the wiki.

Part of me wants to just get through this brood and then enter rehab and go to OO and do my 12 steps and never enter this chat room again, after parting with goodbyes and lots of love, of course. Another part of me has the heart of a true addict, who thinks, maybe with the next brood I can just check in for a couple of hours every so often to check in with my peeps and see what's up with them. The latter of course is the plague of all addicts: I'll only do a little. It won't get out of hand. Yeah, right. 🙄

Yes Molly sleeps away everyday. No one really knows where though. Yes M & M feed the owlets everynight, the stats are posted above the video (small blue box) so you can see how much they are getting (last night they had 10 treats, 2 of those were big rabbits!!)
 I believe they might begin to fledge next week.

Don't know for sure yet but as their feathers develop (you tell by the coloring of the feathers) folks are making guesses. I have no idea, but I have heard guesses of 3 females and 1 male.

that's the first time I went there...how many days old are they....and also San Marcos! amazing. I thought Owlivia was a childrens' book, not another website to watch...see what I miss when I don't pay attention...these owlets are such a treat to view....and such an alternate universe to daily work problems/human life issues...but I digress....

Bill in SD and Tanya - the eagle (in the video) with the goat is a golden eagle. A very, very different creature from the bald. Bald eagles are sort of goofy 😊 - that said with affection. The golden is like the velociraptor in Jurassic Park!

Yikes....I just watched that - which led to other videos of them taking down wolves and foxes too. Nature can be cruel sometimes....but they all have to feed young ones.

There is also a series of photos out there of a bald eagle attacking a swan in flight (swan gets away). Swans are no pushovers. Once watched a young bald going for a pair of trumpeter swans on a pond in NW Wyoming. Before I could say, "You idiot...!" the swans reared up, spread their wings and charged the eagle which barely escaped.

Melanie - my answers to your comments seem to always land in the wrong spot 😞 ... sigh. For the swan & bald eagle, google something like 'bald eagle attack swan'

Melanie - yes, it is painful to watch. A couple of the rodents brought back by M&amp;M were lactating females.....

My husband and were talking the other night about the goings on here with watching nature, and he said this illustrates how cruel life can be. Life has always been very cruel and compared to many other countries, we live a very safe life when you think about it. Many people are against eating meat when they find out the process. I have always been raised with hunters and farms and know the process very well...

Pardon my soapbox, Life is tough, and always has been and always will be, this illustrates it. Poor gophers and rabbits had it rough last night... not to mention the wee rodents.

Good soapbox... I feel cleansed 😊

I've seen some "stuff" myself...and it isn't pretty. And some of it...I've seen us human "animals" doing it...to other species. Not pretty AT ALL. Tough to watch yes. But I find that if I watch it...knowledge is power!

Wooooow! Haven't been back for over a week due to computer problems. These guys have gotten huge! So Molly's staying out all day, now? And co-hunting at night? Have the others' sizes caught up with Max?

Welcome back! You have missed a lot. Check out all the new photos at <http://mollysbox.wordpress.com/blog/>. Then go see the video of the two interviews of Eric Blehm, the author of the yet to be completed e-book at <http://www.ustream.tv/theowlbox>. You'll have to go back into the previous pages of videos to find them. Then check out the new Wiki set up by Molly watchers from this site and see the poetry and information saved there at <http://mollyowl.pbworks.com/>. There is a recorded video of the Molly delivering the "Big Thing" on <http://www.ustream.tv/theowlbox>. Look for the video by that title. Molly shows up at 1 hour and 47 minutes, so unless you want to wait that long, you want to move the bar until the time reaches about 1 hour 45 minutes.

How do you get to the over flow chat? When I reload the page I see "Over flow chat" briefly above the video feed but there is nothing for me to click on, and then it reverts to the stats for last nights hunting and number of treats/visits.

That overflow chat is the one from Ustream. The blue box including the treat info and the chat info is copied from the originating Ustream site, and that's why we see that, but it has nothing to do with this site. There is no "overflow" here. We like our chat better, but if you want to check it out, you can click on the video above and it will take you to the Ustream site. There are 3 chats there. One is the "social stream". The other is the "Chat" which has limited capacity. If the Chat is full, then you will see the "overflow chat". All of these move much faster than this chat and are for short messages only. You have to log into Ustream in order to participate.
