Here is another link about preening

<http://www.calkducks.net/duckswetf.htm>

The page is mainly about ducks and a condition called "wet feather" but the first few paragraphs apply to all birds.

There are several reasons birds preen.

"It [preening] includes the removal of parasites, the removal of scales which cover newly sprouting feathers, and also the spreading of oil over clean feathers. It also includes the combing of the barbs on the feather so that the barbules and even smaller hooks called barbicelli interlock and form a protective layer to repel water."

The reason an owl pops a pellet is to make room for the next meal. It can't swallow a new rat until it gets rid of what is left of the last one! I am sure this tidbit of information will make your day!

For several days now, the owlets have been incessantly occupied with what we are terming preening. However I wouldn't think they would preen to that degree. I'm wondering whether a) they aren't itching from molting down, or b) they aren't promoting the molting of the down. Does anyone have any thoughts or knowledge? I can't find anything on the internet.

Today, 09:38:08 - Flag - Like - ReplyJL

Elliot, it seems they are going through a lot of changes now, especially in their strength and feathers, i am amazed at how they are able to be so snowy white, amazing grooming that they do.

I think it's b but I also wonder if the owlets need to water-proof their new feathers. I think all birds have some oil they need to spread onto the feathers.

A friend wanted to know where owls came from so I looked it up. Interesting, barn owls are in a different family from most other owls. Archaeopteryx was the first bird, some 150 million years ago. Along the way, owls evolved as their own species, being found to live some 60 million years ago, if not sooner. Owls were more successful than other birds, filling every role of birds as we know them today, until other birds became more successful and the owls started dying out, leaving just two main families, the Strigidae (all owls except Barn owls and Grass owls) and the then more common Tytonidae (Barn owls and Grass owls).

Gradually, the typical owls (Strigidae) over took the Tytonidae, the Strigidae became the more common family, some 200 different species, the Tytonidae have around 17 different species.

Sometimes you (I) just have to wait several seconds staring at black box for the video to load. And if you scroll down past it, the video may stop loading and you'll have to refresh. That's the software second guessing you, "thinking" that if you scroll right past, you don't want to see the video. That.

Deb, if you have problems with the video try closing this page and maybe even getting off the internet, then going back on line. If you've been on for a long time and have a HUGE line of chat it may be hanging up the video. Just too much information for your computer to handle. I can see the video just fine so I know it's workina. Bia screen on the owls and the smaller - owl box 2 - screen is on the box.

Hope that helps!

I'm stepping out on a limb by posting this because it's not owl related, however a true testament of what mothers and fathers won't do to protect their young. This is from a live cam of a bald eagle nest in Oregon. They have had lots of snow for days. This parent is sitting on 2 eggs and hardly moves a muscle. I check in on this cam a couple times a day also. 😊

I didn't get all of the chat on the UStream site but it sounds like Stacey is concerned about owl boxes being put up, especially in the San Diego area. She thinks they don't have sufficient perches and they don't have a way for owlets to get back up to the box if they fall. She believes there should be laws enacted to specify construction details. I'm not sure about this but I think she's trying to talk Carlos into putting in some type of slanted ramp so the owlets could climb back up to the box if necessary. Others think she is a big extreme in her ideas and point out that owls survived on their own long before she wrote her book. They say that if the owlets can't get back to the nest box, they will at least be able to get to Carlos' newer platform or the fence or the nearby trees.

I don't know enough about this to have an opinion but it's interesting.

I question this also, many have fledged over years and years without obvious problems. I have watched birds fledge in my yard, many from very high nests and they do not go out until they are mature to do so. Personally i question more her interference in Wesley's upbringing, more than i would natures.

Farmers have been setting up owl boxes for decades, is she going to go after them next?

It is interesting and i can just state what i observe and read.

Another video you have to watch!

This is of a barn owl fledgling, who climbs up the tree to get back to the nest!

Stacey O'Brien who wrote the Wesley book says it's common for them to do that before their wings are strong enough to fly well. They start the flying process by sort of jumping/flying from box to tree to fence, etc. But sometimes get to the ground and can't get back up. They'll use their talons and some wing flapping to help them climb trees. I thought she was kidding until I watched this video.

Because this box is on a post, they'll have to climb up the nearby tree or fence.

To see the whole box, you can change your screen size for a moment then change it back. Hold down the CTRL key and hit the + key once or twice. It will expand your screen shot and you'll be able to see the whole Blue Box of Rodent Death. Then hold down the CTRL key and hit the - key a couple times to put it back to the original screen size. This + thing is great for people who think the chat text is too small to read; just punch it up larger and leave it there.

Total treats = 14.

To see the whole box, you can change your screen size for a moment then change it back. Hold down the CTRL key and hit the + key once or twice. It will expand your screen shot and you'll be able to see the whole Blue Box of Rodent Death. Then hold down the CTRL key and hit the - key a couple times to put it back to the original screen size. This + thing is great for people who think the chat text is too small to read; just punch it up larger and leave it there.

Morning, Owls and Watchers!

Looks like an exciting evening with 14 deliveries and still time for another one or two.

I think I read on the Barn Owl Trust site that at fledging the owlets can weight slightly MORE than their parents although I'm sure they slim down quickly with the efforts of flying. I suppose it's enough body weight and potential energy to get them through their first lean days while learning to hunt for themselves.

Love your sense of humor! I don't know how to pin the map. Something about zooming in to find your town, and then your street even. You have to zoom your way in past all the other balloons. There are instructions on here somewhere and people have done it to success. If no one can answer your question now, be sure to ask again later. Now, I was on my way to what's left of a good night sleep, so I'll sign off now for real. Thank you for the quickie. 😊 I enjoyed it!

Today, 01:43:23 – Flag – Like – Reply

Great horned owls do take birds (including barn owls) and can take very large prey. Their diet is different from a barn owl's, though. I don't think birds are on the barn owl menu. They prefer rodents and small mammals like rabbits. Haven't see the other barn owl website, so I don't know what goes on there.

Yes, I read that in Stacy O'Brien's blog. Two died and no one knows why. They suspected poisoned prey was fed to them but so far it appears neither of other two owlets ate it and both parents are doing well. It should be safe to visit them if you want to take a look.

As much as I love nature....it sucks! lol You must have a tender heart like me. I love this owl box but I must admit I did not like seeing the live bunny!!

Sometimes these nature things are hard to watch because anything can happen 😞 😊 Whatever happens happens, and it is natural....even though we don't like it.

While I certainly have compassion for your acquaintance in their loss,
Remember to never allow tragedy to silence laughter.
You do so at the risk of finding tragedy everywhere, and laughter nowhere.

No, I haven't actually left yet. Before I go:

Remember: Tomorrow, Friday April 30, at 3 pm PDT, Carlos will be interviewing Chris Adams, the Illustrator of the Molly e-Book.To read recorded previous chats, poetry, or for other interesting facts and resources go to <http://mollyowl.pbworks.com/>

Molly's Cookies Recipe has been added to the Wiki under "Just for Fun".

If you want to add your own owl poetry (or anything else) to the wiki you can ask someone to do it for you or you can ask to be given access.

In an owl box high in the sky,
 lives an owl named Molly and sometimes her guy raising four owlets together.
 We watch as they begin to feather and grow from eggs to adult,
 has turned Molly watchers into a cult.

I don't know what the proper form is Also, if using the word cult offends, I will delete.

Just was reading last night on Stacey O'Briens blog and someone said people in the chat room were like a cult.

LOL - One man's church is another man's cult. I choose to stay away from the ones where every word is overtly flowered with delicate femininity and gushing praise. There's just something spooky about that. Especially when dealing with raptors and prey. Give me a stack of research papers, a few hundred links to studies, and a few well reasoned experts in the field and I'm good to go. Throw in a bunch of creative people with OCD, and I'm in heaven. 😊

My thoughts go out to all of the people/animals affected by the recent oil disaster in the Gulf...

Being that it has now reached the shores, there is growing concern that this will have a much larger environmental impact on the surrounding wildlife (2 National Wildlife Refuges are located right on the shore), which includes birds, than the Exxon Valdez spill.

As I watch our peaceful (kind of...lol) brood here tonight, my thoughts go to those many animals that will perish at the hands of human "interference".

My hope is that they can get a cap on the oil soon, so that many lives are lost or affected.

Namaste.

My husband is an energy engineer who designs solar and wind power plants. Last week, his company laid people off because they can't get enough contracts to build the plants to keep enough employees busy. And this is an established company, 30 years old or so, well respected in the business, but those kind of power plants just are not catching on. What a pity for us all.

Yesterday, 22:50:13 – Flag – Like – Reply

It is a pity... 😞 I sincerely wish they were catching on more.

I know here in the midwest, there are lots of those wind energy (those big windmill type things...not sure what they are called.) things. I see them everywhere, which is inspiring to see.

I do hope the best for this situation...the earth can heal itself, yes...but we keep messing it up!!

Happy to hear that your husband works for a company like that - but sad to hear about the layoffs. Did your husband stay "safe"?

This is definitely going to be a doozy (sp?)...

From what I read in the news tonight - it is going to cause much more environmental damage than the Exxon Valdez spill, if they don't get that oil capped. It may not have been a big initial spill as the Exxon, but it's in a much more fragile ecosystem...therefore the more damage part.

It is sad. I agree with you 😊

They don't hear the squawking. We are listening to an amplified version of all the sounds, due to the mic placement and sensitivity. Carlos has it turned way up. Up to 11, even. He says he can not hear them unless he step outside near the box. That may change, as the owlets fledge though. He'll have

4 of them sitting in that tree all night, squaking their heads off. 😊

Lovely, Merritt – A rhyming haiku! Just got home from the screening of a wonderful documentary about older women and their power and the amazing things they/we do even as we age. It's called "I Know A Woman Like That", written and directed by Elaine Madsen, produced by (and co-created by) her daughter, the wonderful, Oscar-nominated actress Virginia Madsen (Sideways, The Sphere and more). I am not yet to the age of the women in the film, but it was so inspiring to think that maybe the best is yet to come! anyway, nice to be back on here watching the beloved owlets grow through another night! 😊 And thinking up more haiku!

Several days ago, someone asked "What did they call barn owls before there were barns?" Everyone gave names like what you have above, except me. I thought I was being witty when I replied something like, "Cave owl, lean-to owl, hole in the tree owl." All these places were before there were barns.

Get it? Ha ha! I was late replying so I don't think anyone saw it. That, or no one thought it was funny except me! 😊
