Maybe Molly & Mac went hungry last night because they gave all the grub to the kids? Tonight they're having a date night..... gazing into each other's eyes over stuffed rabbit and rat pilaf.

But the kids are home alone, so they'd better not get carried away (M&M, that is!)

 Maybe they don't have enough money to buy three more meals so the owlets don't fight over the toys

We're no chickens, we're not geese
On rats and rodents we like to feast!
We screech for supper instead of sing
Don't call us bluebirds or those humming things

We have talons not webbed feet
We sleep all day, at night we "tweet"
We are owlets and soon to be
Fledgling rockstars, just wait and see!

Eating and crunching up prey,
There's Max, Pattison, Austin and Wesley,
Capturing our hearts all night and day.
And then there's Molly and McGee,

We're just having her do these as a practice set in her sophomore year. No real pressure, no real preparation, but still, they are the SATs. This is to see how she does and to know where to focus in the future. She is pretty smart, but sometimes is too sure of herself and her ability to get by without studying. So it could go great or it could be a wake up call. We'll see.

Regarding the questions of the sex of the owlets....

(Someone said it looks as if Max/ine is wearing knickers) so I thought of this:

What do we have?

Some knickers or pantaloons?

Which ones will they wear?

Hor ku a roo

Paula, When I saw the posting of the deer that visits you every day. It reminds me of my Daughters neighbor across from her. The little girl who lives there is a special needs child, and everyday when she gets off the school bus a deer comes out from the trees next to her home and she meets it and throws her arms around its neck and they play. If she does not get off the bus the deer will come to the drive after the bus leaves. so sweet!

Secretly I wish the owlets would "keep house" so that we could watch them grow, learn and "live happily ever after" - Other times, I wish - - OK already - allow me the honor and privilege to watch you spread your wings and fly . . . so that I can get on with my life!

My gardens need tending, clothes need mending and I suppose my husband would enjoy some sort of dialog (in forms of intellectual conversation from time to time) - but NO, not today, um, um, Molly, McGee and the babies - "I just have to see, I just have to check on something. Oh yes, I'll only be a minute and then the clock strikes midnight". I'm doomed.

Something like yawats uppmo who posted just above Brandi. Either they have a chat history that shows a history of abuse of this chat line, or they come from out of nowhere with silly gushy phrases or rude remarks meant to clog up the chat line, or worse, get people to show them some attention. It's nice to have a code to signal when there's no sense in responding because the poster is insincere. The best policy is to flag, of course, and move on with no further thought. But, in all cases, it's best to be sure. We shouldn't signal or flag someone just because we disagree with them.

You can check everyone's "DETAILS" if you hover over their name...and it will show all of their log in names, but really you can only have 1 name on your account...but different log-in names.

Here's an owl pattern if you want to use it with the kids to cut and paste, http://www.pigeoncreekprimitives.com/OWL_PATTERN.gif
 I saw an idea on a scrapbooking site. They had cut out several owls in several colors and applied them to a window.

Another idea; trace the owl on a black piece of construction paper and punch holes all along the outline. When you hang it on a window, the owl will literally light up!

Because of this owl site, I've been thinking lately of early lit classes and have finally put it all together.

Hiawatha's Childhood
by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

When he heard the owls at midnight,
Hooting, laughing in the forest,
"What is that?" he cried in terror;
"What is that," he said, "Nokomis?"
And the good Nokomis answered;
"That is but the owl and owlet,
Talking in their native language,
Talking, scodling at each other."
Then the little Hiawatha
Learned their names and all their secrets,
How they built their nests in swummer,
Where they hid themselves in winter,
Talked with them when'er he met them,
Called them "Hiawatha's Chickens."

I had to run some errands this afternoon and decided to download the first book in the Guardians of Ga'Hoole series so I could listen while driving. This is the series we've been talking about today that's been made into an animated movie for release this Fall. I'm only a short ways in to the book, but I have to tell you all that it's incredibly charming and brings you immediately into the world of the barn owls. I think I'm going to love it. If you like audio books you'll like the reading of this one. I was delighted to find out that the young owl who is at the center of the story is a singer and a poet! His first bug song will make you laugh out loud.

Here's the trailer for the movie, in case any of you missed it earlier.

It is most likely that owlets (not babies) are not "taught" to groom themselves by the mother owl.

Nor are they taught many, many other things we've witnessed them doing.

It's instinct. Natural behavior, much like like scratching, screeching, and coughing up pellets! 🙄

James, I think you're right...especially about the pellet thing! But Stacey O'Brian did say (in her blog) that the amount of time a mother barn owl stays in the nest varies, with some staying 'til the owlets (not babies) fledge.

Today, 14:17:13 - Flag - Like - ReplyJames Hill

Oh sure, there are always variables involved and no one owl will do as every other. No disagreement there. I was only saying that Molly's leaving most likely had no effect on the owlets grooming habits.

Today, 14:45:18 - Flag - Like - ReplyJL

I think like incubation, age of fledging, etc., in nature all individuals are different and mature different so it is all variable not locked into a set time.

You know, I meant for my comment to be rather "tongue-in-cheek". I mean, if I could help those owlets (not babies) get rid of some of that fluff, I would...I'm just saying...

 When that owlet in front, was looking at the camera, we just had to start singing!

Looking at the camera, who, who, who, who,
 Looking at the camera, who, who, who, who,
 Looking at the camera, who, who, who, who...

He seemed to be rocking his head with us until he closed his eyes and yawned as if we were rocking him to sleep. Then we stopped singing and he opened his eyes wide again as if to say, "where did the music go?" So, we started singing again and he went to sleep. Oh he's awake. Maybe we should sing! Sure, it was just a sweet coincidence, but those owlets know something's up with that thing we call a camera! lol

As these owls will soon begin to fledge, I thought I'd post from the link I provided above (Owl Facts):

"In nature, owlets often find themselves grounded in the process of testing their wings. Many young birds lose their footing during these first explorations and fall to the ground. A grounded chick may look lost and vulnerable, but chances are, its parents know exactly where it is, and will continue to feed and care for it. Also, many young birds are quite capable of climbing back into their tree using their beaks and talons.

If you find a grounded owlet, don't panic. If the chick is not obviously injured, or in immediate danger from vehicles, people or predators, the best thing to do is just walk away quietly and let nature take its course."

Well, I'm a little disappointed. 😞

Just scanned over the photos from last night on Molly's blog and I didn't see the ONE photo I wanted to see.

Below is the shot I was hoping for. I just happened to grab the screen shot at the exact moment Carlos snapped a pic.

The over exposure (due to his flash) was my confirmation that my trigger finger reflexes are still with me. 😊

To the other photo hoarders like me, feel free to copy/save the images, and maybe try your own hand at a using little creative licence, as I did with the moon.

Hey, if Carlos can do it, then so can I! 😊

As a photog, I'm reasonably certain he does have the shot, it's likely he just doesn't feel the image is worth sharing.

Could be any number of reasons. Possibly too far out of focus, or maybe she was obscured by part of the tree.

Remember, his angle from the kitchen is slightly different than that of the video cam.

I won't pester him with questions but, I may post the screen cap somewhere he could potentially see it. 😊

Here is another link about preening

<http://www.callducks.net/duckswetf.htm>

The page is mainly about ducks and a condition called "wet feather" but the first few paragraphs apply to all birds.

There are several reasons birds preen.

"It [preening] includes the removal of parasites, the removal of scales which cover newly sprouting feathers, and also the spreading of oil over clean feathers. It also includes the combing of the barbs on the feather so that the barbules and even smaller hooks called barbicelli interlock and form a protective layer to repel water."

The reason an owl pops a pellet is to make room for the next meal. It can't swallow a new rat until it gets rid of what is left of the last one! I am sure this tidbit of information will make your day!
