Feel free to take any of my screenshots, edited or not, and do whatever you wish with them, even repost them later. I only post images here to share with others, and I expect others to share them freely. I don't mind anyone re-purposing any of them. The only time I will ever ask for an image of mine not to be passed around is if it is one of my own copyrighted images from my website. But, even then, it is perfectly acceptable to share links to the image, just not copy and print it.

In many cases they end up on the ground. That does not automatically mean anything is wrong. In many cases these birds are able to climb up into nearby trees. Determine if the parent birds are still in the area. The adults will continue to feed and protect young birds even if they are on the ground. The adults cannot bring the babies back up to the nest. Observe the young bird from a distance. Are there flies on the bird? Is it able to climb and hop? Caution - parent birds will defend their young against people and may swoop down if they feel their babies are being threatened. Are there cats and dogs roaming the area? They pose a significant threat to young birds on the ground. Today, 14:41:40 - Flag - Like - Repty . 	To those who are concerned that there wasn't enough food brought last night - remember fully grown owls only weight about 15.5 oz, for a male and 20 oz for a female. The babies may weight nearly that much now, but they probably got more than enough last night, with snacks left over for today. In their confined space, they are only getting limited exercise and not burning up as many calories. Today, 12:14:15 – Flag – Like – Reply. Liked by Werritt James Hill (in Trepidation Station)

Try full-screen!" And I did, and it really does look markedly clearer in full-screen mode than it used to! Yea! For those of you who don't know how to get to full screen, on the bottom of the video screen is a grey area, it shows, from left to right: two arrows in a circle (that's refresh), two parallel lines (that's pause) the words On Air", a blue Menu box (you can use this to get more info and to get to the other chat rooms, etc.), the volume button, and on the far right, four arrows pointing into four corners. That's the button you hit to go to full screen.
