Christina Sigversten Podvin That was sweet! The one that got that meal was looking at her with no expectations. What a treat for him/her. He seemed surprised as if to say "Who for me?"

Merritt At Nancy, as you came out. The camera is crazy because Molly knocked into it! Carbs had regurgitated already, though, to give us a better view in the event of anyone stopping out. Max will be 49 days old in the morning. Fudging typically occurs after 50 days old. Probably won't be tonight, but it will definitely be one day next week! Today, 00:49:58 - Like - Reply

Christina Sigversten Podvin I have walked away one too many times now. Can anyone tell if they are switching spots in the owl box, shuffling from the front to back as they are fed? They are back to the end of the live so to speak? Today, 00:43:29 - Like - Reply

Latrippi It's hard to make out what's happening inside the owl box. At least, for me. I was thinking we weren't seeing much eating at all (apart from the stunning view of that first mouse being nibbled and then swallowed down whole). But we can only see one corner of the box and it's very blurry. We can only guess! But they seem awfully calm to me tonight. Today, 00:44:58 - Like - Reply

Christina Sigversten Podvin They really seem calm. I have enjoyed seeing them in there like this again. It's always so hard to imagine how the scene is playing out in there these days. Just hearing the squeaking and seeing the deliveries hasn't satisfied my appetite as of late. I think Carbs should try this view out again. I like him shaking it up a bit. This new outside camera view will be so great for the fledging, so excited! Today, 01:00:00 - Like - Reply

The chat is posted through that time. Since then, Carbs came on and explained about the new camera angle and how he wasn't sure if it would work well. Everyone loved the view of the owls through the door and of course Molly knocked into the camera. You can see a bunch of screen shots in the basement. Christina Sigversten Podvin OK, here is the video of the barn owl, Mote, taking a bath. He's the owl I mentioned that can't fly and he's 14 1/2 yrs. old (not the norm). Interestingly enough, he is also afraid of mice and cats. He has "glass bone syndrome" from improper diet given to him when he was young (lack of calcium). Here's the link to the right center they're the ambassador for. I have not visited the center and have nothing to do with it... just came across it on Youtube. Chris - I just saw a PDF. I simply refixed the browser, log out then use the "End" key to hit the bottom of the page as fast as it will go, clicking More at every page. Then I used Ctrl+F to search each instance of "Expand" to open the threaded comments. The F3 key will advance you to the next occurrence of your search term. It only takes a few minutes to go back over this or more. I also paste both videos so the pages load faster.

And with that I will leave tonight's PDF all in your hands. 🙄

BTW, I explored the file photo folder a photo of Moby sitting on the "ledge edge" just in case you wanted one for the timeline or front page. It's a 800x800 screen cap.

LaTrippi
Oh, I didn't see that photo (or the folder even) - thanks. James! The wk didn't seem to make thumbnails automatically so adding photos to the pages didn't seem to be time consuming. Would be really nice to have them on the timeline, tho.

The nesting encouragement for the parents to keep hunting and probably serves as a location beacon too.
And it's not me twittering. I hate that whole twitter thing. bah! Way too restrictive on the characters.

Maple are for the most part green, then in the fall they turn all kinds of colors, red , orange, yellow. There are some red maples but they are dark burgandy color.

I was curious to know if it not dark here yet so I went to Weather Underdog <http://www.weatherunderdog.com/usa/forecast/forecast/> and the neural observatory <http://www.nasa.gov/mission/keck/keck110001.html> and they listed all those times. I don't know the difference so went to http://www.wikipedia.org/wiki/astromical\_twilight and learned a lot.
