Kathryn R (Where's the fish?) Morning my favorite peeps! I have about a half hour here until I take my daughter to the county fair! A friend of hers just called and told her she had an extra VIP ticket to see Weird Al Yankovich tonight at the fair, but alas, my brother is driving in from Eugene this afternoon and we are all going out to dinner with our parents. Anyways, she's only 11 and I'm not sure I want Weird Al to be her first concert... Today, 12:44:47 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by Dorothy

Cheryl Owen Maybe she was just ordering breakfast then to be fair it wasn't the owl on the roof that was behaving strangely, it was Molly that was acting differently - but then I never saw her first time round with just eggs, she already had 3 owlets when I started watching. ... and I'm not sure how the other chat room thought it was anyone other than McGee that actually turned up with the food as it clearly was him that time!

JH (Owls ≠ People) What was strange about her actions? I've only skimmed the basement, as I assumed that most of the fairy tail-like comments were coming from the other chat, or the social stream.

Today, 12:15:22 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by Kathryn R (Where's the fish?)

Cheryl Owen Normally when McGee turns up or is anywhere in the near vicinity, Molly starts with the fairly loud 'food' call that she does. Well this time the Owl turned up on the Kestrel Box and she didn't make a sound, when it eventually landed on the Owl Box she got up and was looking up - as in the screen shot, but instead of a food call, she was just making a fairly quiet 'twittering' sound - It wasn't a distress call and she didn't appear agitated or upset - but it was definitely not her 'normal' behaviour when McGee turns up. When he did turn up with food half hour later she was making her normal noises again. Just watching video of the outside Owl wouldn't really tell you anything, but if Carlos had video of her behaviour then he would be able to tell us whether or not he had witnessed it before with the last brood.

Shadow In the 1940s, a professor below California discovered a poor-will snuggled into a rock cavity in the Chuckawalla Mountains. The bird's body temperature was more than forty degrees below normal, no heartbeat could be detected, no moisture were found in the cold mirror placed in front of its nostrils, and there was no response to light shined in its eyes. The results of these tests left little doubt that the bird actually was hibernating. An identifying band was placed on its leg, and each year for the next four years the same poor-will was found hibernating in its rocky niche. Since that discovery, several other reports of hibernating poor-wills have been confirmed. The name given to the poor-will by the Hopi Indians is Holchko, which means "the sleeping one."

Shadow Barn owls have a body temperature of 104F. If a brooding barn Owl were hibernating, its body temperature would drop. Eggs would be expected to have difficulty hatching at 64F. Today, 11:20:43 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by Wonder K Cheryl Owen

JH (Owls ≠ People) I am confused. Why are you making comparisons between a hibernating bird and a brooding bird? Today, 11:53:09 - Flag - Like - Reply

Shadow Because some people have commented that Molly is "hibernating" during periods of inactivity while brooding. Today, 11:57:27 - Flag - Like - Reply

JH (Owls ≠ People) That's a new one on me, I haven't heard or seen the term hibernation used by anyone. Must have missed it. But hibernating is not the same thing as going into a comatose-like state while sleeping. Molly is pretty much at rest most of the day now and using very little energy. When she sleeps she does appear to be in a comatose-like state, at least for short periods of time. But that is not hibernating and there is no reason to suspect that her body temp would drop much below normal, if it drops at all.

Today, 12:12:35 - Flag - Like - Reply

lissanne James: Shadow is right. Someone was speculating about Molly & hibernation. I chose to at the time, it was just too ludicrous.

 People do it all the time. "Bear country" is a very vague term. All of the NC mountains, a large portion of the low country, and vast expanses of other areas in the state are home to black bears. People tent camp in all those places all the time. It just means you take proper precautions and know the behavior of the bears. Now, if you're talking about grizzly country, then all bets are off, at least for me, but black bears are really not much of an issue if you know what you're doing.

 Good Morning All. It is great to see the chat up and running. It is super great to see that Molly got food, and super super great to hear from Carlos. I have been going about this all wrong - instead of staying up late waiting to see something happen, I should get sleep and then get up early and watch as dawn comes to San Marcos. Now I think of that.

Kristi, I think your vision is a good one, maybe Chris will draw it up for us.

Cheryl - I suspect that McGee vocalizes as he approaches. We can't hear it, but Molly can. That's why she could tell the difference between mystery visitor & McGee - mystery visitor had no reason to vocalize because Molly is not his mate. As you so accurately observed, her behavior was entirely different.

Morning MODs. Jan: I read your post about bonding. Being the honest person that I am, I will admit to having to look up the term James used, because I really have never used that exact word before. It sounds like the real deal to me, but if people just want to call it a hug, then they certainly can. It's a very friendly hug!

I'm going to have to scroll down later and see James' comments, so I'm making this post without knowing what he wrote. Apologies if I repeat or make this even more confusing. But I think one of the things that does make this more difficult to understand is that owls don't have any... um... external parts. Some birds do, but not owls. During mating, there is a transfer of fluids and during bonding there isn't, but the transfer doesn't take place in the same manner as in mammals.

I did already read about no external parts Owlo. I guess someone could still argue the fact if McGee is actually producing anything or not.

Oh OK. Didn't know we had gotten to that in the conversation! Thanks. I think this all started because someone (long before you and I started talking about the details!) felt McGee was forcing himself on "poor Molly". Doesn't seem like that's possible in the owl world; at least not in the way the poster thought.

OK, now I'm really leaving. DH at the door, tapping his foot, with market bag in hand. Time for the weekly veggie shopping!

I think we need a definition of copulation. To me it would mean cloacal apposition. That is why, way back somewhere, I suggested that you have to look at his tail. When his tail rotates below hers (and she rolls her tail slightly to one side to help him out), must be copulation because it's the only way you're going to accomplish cloacal apposition. Sometime yesterday someone posted a video of their copulation. It's from just the right angle and you can see his tail rotating below hers. What gets more confusing is that sometimes the male will merely land on female's back, just stand there. No copulation - but still a part of the entire repertoire of bonding behaviors.

Today, 09:13:35 - Flag - Like - Reply
Liked by Colleen Jan (thinking like an owl) Owosaurus (aka Techno-Twinkie) JH (Owls ≠ People)

Colleen

Thanks lissanne. I think the act preformed during mating and bonding would be the same then. Some people might still argue that if McGee doesn't produce anything, it still is not mating. Do you know anything about that?

Colleen

Really since there is no egg to fertilize, maybe it wouldn't make a difference. If some people only consider the owls "mating" if a fertilized egg is produced, then it also doesn't matter what McGee does either.

Today, 09:26:22 - Flag - Like - Reply

lissanne

Colleen - sorry, I don't follow....maybe it's too early in the morning. To me it's actually very simple - copulation is cloacal apposition, no matter whether there is an egg to be fertilized, or whether the male produces anything. That is why 'mating' is such a vague term. One problem may be that people do not give a clear definition of the terms they use, and sometimes they simply don't have enough info to produce a definition.

Today, 09:37:45 - Flag - Like - Reply

I think we need to toss the word 'mating' (except of when speaking of a 'mated pair'), don't know what materials, if any, are being transferred during copulation when the female is incubating. Copulation is cloacal apposition, no matter what is transferred. Copulation would also have nothing to do with fertilization. Copulation is one form of bonding. The pair bond can be reinforced in many ways, copulation is one of these ways. If McGee does not produce anything and achieves cloacal apposition, it's still copulation.

what I call Southern and what I call Mexican are totally different....never met cream gravy in Mexican, lol. Or chicken fried anything, lol. I do cook with cornmeal and buttermilk too. Lots don't think of Texans as "southern" but I am from East Texas so more than someone from say El Paso? And yes lots of the traditional Southern cooking seems based in African American traditions. Have to remember they did a lot of the cooking in OLD days...(not that I think that was correct to be assured on the PC front.) so likes developed for those things.

I hadn't even considered the weight of what she eats - its a good point - although I think the look on her face in the last screen shot George took pretty much sums up how she feels 😊

Nor me George - what will be, will be and that's the attitude I've always had while watching this - open minded and prepared for every eventuality as it is a Wild Barn Owl nest. that said I can't help but feel a little bit pleased that she has been well fed today 😊 😊

Good morning. Only time enough to scroll to the end of Page 1. See maybe an interlooper ??? might have paid a visit to the kestrel box. Just checked to see that the chat was back up. Have to leave for the day. Have a 2 hr. trip for a funeral of a good friend. I wasn't totally unexpected, but doesn't make it any easier. A beautiful day in Maine, but not the best way to have to spend it. Have a good one. May be on for a while this evening.

It's so sweet when she sighs and sleeps(naps)...Jan are owls territorial? If so, then the kestrels will know better than to enter the area of a larger nesting predator...maybe...this may be a tribal area now for barn owls! 😊

I don't think they would be too concerned about each other - I've seen articles on Barn Owls and Kestrels living together quite happily as they have different hunting times - ie Barn Owls are generally Nocturnal and Kestrels are Diurnal. I'll see if I can find some of the articles and post the links - I'm fairly sure that in the article about the Tel Aviv owls it said they have Kestrel boxes up as well - and there is enough food in San Marcos from what Carlos has said that there wouldn't be any worry about that either!

I know that owls are certainly territorial about their nests and its surrounding area, Candace; beyond that, I'll have to check up on. I believe each owl family has it's own hunting areas, but perhaps they overlap when there is an abundance of owl families. Kestrels and Owls are not food competitors because they hunt at different times - kestrels during the day and owls (mainly) at night. The kestrels would be fast asleep when the owls are out, so I'd say they could coexist peacefully.

I thought it was a bit strange that Molly made no sound when that owl first appeared. I reckon it could have been one of the Owlets as she wasn't being aggressive and didn't seem particularly agitated - but it wasn't the same behaviour and sounds that she normally makes when its McGee

Thank You LOL!!! I'm probably totally wrong - but it just didn't seem like the same behaviour that she normally displays when McGee is about - normally if he is in the near vicinity of the box she is calling to him quite loudly - just seemed very subdued to me - and when he was on the kestrel box she wasn't calling at all.

Thats what made me wonder - there is no mistaking that sound LOL! ... and the fact that she wasn't calling when they were on the kestrel box - I'm sure she must have been aware that someone was there - If it wasn't McGee then I do feel it was one of her 'kids' though as there didn't seem to be any aggression or worry at all in all she was behaving - would be nice to think we just got a glimpse of one of 'our' owlets 😊

This is a comment on our 'bonding' conversation of yesterday. Because of the chat malfunction, I couldn't post it last night.

What James posted yesterday should end all speculation and argument about what is going on. This is similar to what I learned when I researched the subject several weeks ago, and what I said when I posted at that time and also in this thread. I admit to being a coward about this, because I was afraid to use the correct term for fear of upsetting anyone. But James is braver than I am, and his reference leaves no doubt. Let there be any further misunderstanding, this much is clear: What we have been referring delicately as 'bonding' is actually the act of copulation, a term all of us understand. Whether it results in fertilized eggs or no eggs, it is the same act. (continued below)

Nature is not wasteful; one behavior can serve different purposes. In this case copulation serves as a means to reproduction AND as a means of bonding the two owls together. The sentence James emphasized said "Copulation continues with decreasing frequency throughout an incubation and chick rearing." As that behavior decreases, the parental response of the parents to the hungry cries of the chicks continues the commitment of the parents to the chicks.

I never quite know what word to use when describing it! I think we all know its copulation but I like the word 'bonding' as that sums up what is happening all round to me!

Well put, Jan. Your description has been my impression, too. I guess I have used to word "bonding" as an easier way for me to describe what was happening when answering questions about it here in the chat. As Cheryl said, it does sum it up.

Maybe McGee has a second family to care for. Barn Owls do bigamy (They are not in the same league as King Mongkut of Siam (1804 -1868) who was the king in "The King and I", he had 9000 wives. He claimed to have only loved the first 700.)

It's got to be so boring for Molly to just sit all day and night on those eggs. She is such a good mother though! She has so much patience.

I'm not sure owls get bored, I'm sure it's all part of instinct to sit all day like that on the eggs.

I agree with you Kathryn that it is instinct for them to just sit on the eggs and not even think about all that time they are doing it without anything to tax their minds except perhaps when the next meal will arrive. Too bad she can't read. Carlos could give her the book about her and her owlettes from last time. 😊 She'd probably would give a HOOT about it! 😊

Hi Susan. Grits were a breakfast staple in our home when I was growing up. We never had cheese grits, though. They were served with a dollop of butter and salt and pepper.

Hellooooo again my favorite peeps! Had a good talk with hubby, leftover crockpot in the microwave for dinner, lazy Friday night...

Saw Colleen talking about grits down below. You can probably buy them at grocery stores anywhere, but not likely served at all in restaurants in Michigan. It reminded me of a funny story, which I probably already shared here. We had just moved from Houston, Texas up to Ohio, and my sister Molly (yes I have a sister named Molly, LOL, I don't know why I never mentioned that before!) had a friend over for dinner. We were having ham, grits and black-eyed peas for dinner. My mom asked my friend's sister if she would like to try some grits. She said, "Well, I've never had them before but I'll try one or two..."

ROTFLU If you are from the south and know what grits are, that is truly hilarious! 😂😄

Did you see the link I left about possession of feathers, tiger ? I'm not sure whether the owls are considered migratory or not, but I believe there are other laws covering raptors. That being said, I have a number of songbird feather collected over the years from the ground around the lawn, on aek through the woods, etc. I also have one loon feather that I treasure that was given to me by a wildlife biologist after a dead loon was found along the shore of the lake and he came to get it for a necropsy to determine cause of death.

So here's the story. I hate shopping. Had to do it anyway. This has been bugging me for a long time, so I want to vent a little. Have you noticed higher prices at the grocery? I'm sure you have. But have you noticed the smaller packaging!? Here's a few examples, and I'm sure y'ow have some more.

Ice cream, no longer 1/2 gal, but 3 pints, cost more than 1/2 gal used to.
Yogurt used to be 8 oz, now is 6 oz, and costs more than 8oz used to.
Mayonnaise was 32 oz, now 30 oz, and you guessed it, cost more than the 32 oz.
Toilet paper, used to have more sheets on the roll, but now has double sheets, hence "double roll". Here's the kicker; it is narrower than it used to be, by almost one inch!
And eggs! Where did all those Large eggs go?! The carton says large, but at best they are medium, sometimes small, and they cost more.
ARRGGGGHHHHH!
(thanks)

All normal results of real world fuel costs, labor costs, and the high cost of subsidized commodities for far, far too long. Expect things to continue in the same direction.

Correct about the size of eggs, JH, size is regulated. I understand what you are saying about fuel costs, labor costs, etc. But, why try to fool the public with the smaller amounts in the same sized container - 6 oz of tuna in the same sized can as the 7 oz used to be? It almost seems like "double dipping" when the get their prices increases both ways - increase the price and decrease the volume. I know we can't expect it to happen, but, just once I would like to see a product label say "Now, 20% Less"

Karen, vanilla has been going up for years and is why the size of the icecream box changes and at first the price didn't. Chocolate and vanilla are both subject to the problems of local wars in places where it's grown.

Corn has done crazy stuff due to ethanol production. Mexico was on the verge of riots last summer due to corn shortages and high price of tortillas.

As you can see, it's mostly government tinkering (wars, subsidies, "green" fuels, soy based biodegradable "paper" plates and the like)

Don't forget the new war on obesity that includes taxes and the idea that individuals are too stupid and lazy to count out 12 crackers for their 100 calorie snack and have to package them all as if for a vending machine.

Convenience foods are partly a direct result of higher taxes which forced a lot of women into the workplace over the last 40 years. If we stopped feeding the tax machine you wouldn't need that second income to pay Uncle Sam and his relatives and you wouldn't be tempted to buy the juice boxes, cookies snacks, etc. but would fill your own thermos and count out your own cookies

Oh very, very cute little guy! And he did look like the sly one - checking to see if anyone was looking. When I used to walk in the cornfield (before they planted corn - how dare they!), I would occasionally see a fox. I talked to him. He looked at me. We had a healthy respect for each other. Great pix - I'll still hold out in case you catch a squirrel at some point though. 😊

He (or she) was cute. I've only seen it twice before and both other times I didn't have my camera ready. It just started hanging around the pear tree three days ago, to my knowledge. I'm pretty sure it is a pup, born this year. It is really very tiny, and skittish.

No need to wait for Carlos to come on. That is what was suggested. If you are thinking of the other chat room, that is a good place to post general owl related questions for Carlos to answer, but it would not be the best place to post asking him to come here.

My DH doesn't like salmon (California Boy) but our seven year old loves it, as do I. My dad was a fisherman and of Chinook Indian heritage, so we ate lots of fish. He got "grandfathered in" with fishing rights. Don't ask me what that means, that's just what he told me and I was too little to think to ask. We have an electrical storm in the area, heard thunder a bit ago. Looks like rain.

Molly will shred anything larger than a mouse/pocket gopher because she can't swallow it whole. I think Carlos noticed the shredding last time because McGee started bringing in more food/larger prey in time to feed the owlets.

I have to trim mine 3 or 4 times a year! The oldest fronds droop and then turn brown. If you don't trim them off they can blow off during high winds and hurricanes. That's bad because the 'stem' on the frond is serrated on many palms so it's like saws flying through the air at 75 miles per hour. (What's that in kilometers?)

All I know is I asked if Carlos had seen McGee in the palm tree and other folks answered that he had told them it had been trimmed. But my experience with palms (at least the bush type they have), is that if you don't want them to take over you do have to trim them back.

Sorry yowiz had to pack up off the back deck, a sudden thunderstorm developed, didn't want to get my laptop wet or get electrocuted! DH came home to so I need to spend some quality time with him before my daughter gets home from her playdate.

A good time for a couple of reminders to myself 😊 and others, especially those new to the chat room. A repost with one addition from earlier today:

If you leave your computer for a while with the chat open or if you are just taking time out to watch Molly or listen to a posted video - always move your cursor away from the "white space" on the page and into the colored space on the side of the page. If you don't the chat will back up for you and will come flooding in the minute you move your cursor.

Also, if you want to add a reply directly beneath your own post, be careful that you actually click on "reply". When you make a reply to anyone another option appears for you right next to the "Reply" and that is an option to "Delete" your post. If you inadvertently click on Delete it will wipe out not only your original post but the posts of anyone else who has replied to you.

This chat room works a little different than others. If you ask a question, always look below your original post for your answers. Give folks a reasonable time to post answers to you, especially when the chat room is very busy, before asking the question again. It might be helpful to you if you scroll down in the chat to see if the same question has already been asked and answered recently, especially if it pertains to a particular happening or event going on in the video. Likewise, if you wish to make a comment or an answer to a post, click "Reply" and post your answer there to keep that thread in one place

That's what started me thinking about posting that, Becky. Then I thought - why not put it out there for the newcomers along with a couple of other things. The only problem is that most of them will never get to red it. We do need some "sticky notes" to put up there in the "white space" next to OB2 with those types of things ??

The fellow who did the wildlife talks last week said that ornithologists now believe they hunt only by ear. It was a bit nutty so I didn't talk to him but I wanted to ask him if they had tried rehabilitating a one-eyed owl back to the wild. Have previously been lead to believe that they needed both eyes to hunt and wondered if there were new standards now. One of the owls at the nature center was blind in one eye.

Forgive me for not looking up the source right now, Barb, but I read last go round about where some captive barn owls were catching prey in completely dark enclosures, obviously using only their hearing to locate and track the prey.

That's true. I wanted to know if there was some other reason for not releasing a partly blind owl. If rehab takes a while then there is the issue of imprinting but that would be the reason for not releasing rather than the blindness itself. We first saw these owls years ago so it's likely it was assumed not to be able to be released.

Great! 😊 If you are using a SLR camera, invest in some extension tubes. That will allow you to focus really, really close. The grand daddy long legs was touching/probing the camera lens with one leg on that shot.

I went back to look at the legs again. Spider legs really are amazing. We watched an eggsac hatch 2 summers ago. We were so excited when they all started eating. Yes, I have the Canon EOS Rebel T1i and I have been reading Melody and your talks of ext. tubes. She gave me some info! I have to say that my little Canon PowerShot SD 750 takes awesome shots too and sometimes takes better pics than the big mama. However, that could simply be operator error...no! 😊 😊

Compact digitals are great for close up work because they have much greater depth of field than a larger SLR. It's due to the size of the imaging chip. The smaller the chip, the more depth of field. But it can sometimes be hard finding one that will focus really close, especially on auto focus. But extension tubes make the SLR a really fun tool for bugs and flowers. I've seen back-lit flower shots taken before where the flower was actually sitting on the lens of an upturned camera. Neat stuff.

My husband had mice that nested in his car. Once they have been there the odor stays and the critters keep coming back. I think I would try the dryer sheets before I tried something drastic like razor wire under the hood. Maybe they have dryer sheets with Eau de Owl (or some fox urine or hot pepper wax spray. 😊😄😄😄)

That happens more frequently than many people realize - not only squirrels, but mice and even cats. Glad you found them in time, cj. As you know, they can and do make an expensive mess sometimes. Unfortunately, evidence of "critters" under the hood isn't always as noticeable as yours was and an unhappy demise results when the motor gets hot during travel. It more often happens in the climate here when the "critter" finds that nice warm spot under the hood after a vehicle returns from a drive.

This is product I use to keep mice out of the house. It does work. You might try this or a variation of it. You could make your own too! Good luck!

It looks like Molly laid four more eggs - does she leave the nest at night for food or is McGee bringing it to her. Does he change places with her while she hunts. Also is Carlos going to be as informative as he was last time?

Welcome!

<http://mollysbox.wordpress.com/blog/>

Carlos is very informative! Read his blog above. He updates it frequently. McGee delivers at night ... not every night, but Molly does not seem to need food every night. She does stay on the eggs, except for stretching/preening breaks. She does do a few fly outs?? Correct me folks - that is on Molly time, not Kristi time! Carlos said he wouldn't be as chatty this time, but he still is. This gives many of us great comfort. He is as hooked as we all are!

In answer to your questions. No Molly isn't leaving the eggs. McGee brings her food most nights. No McGee doesn't sit on the eggs. And finally Carlos won't be posting updates above the webcam window like last time but there will be regular updates at the blog here

Kristi from VA - strangely feels she must justify her comments! Okay - picture it. I was 6 or 7. Had a babysitter. Came out my back door with no shoes on. Nearly in my grandmother's snake-taken attic. Traumatized, I tell you! Ergo - snake phobia. I will look at them. I just prefer them not being in my yard. Jan (thinking like an owl) (evil grin) I like to play with them; I love the feel of their dry, slippery scales on my skin! In reality the spider is not glowing. It is just so close to the infrared LED lights on the camera that the light overexposes the spider, making it pure white in appearance. The same thing happens if one of the owls gets too close, the white parts of their plumage will be overexposed and pure white.

BTW, that spider is tiny in reality, remember it is right next to the lens. I'd be surprised if it was much longer than 1/8 of an inch.

JH: Don't you feel this second clutch is peculiar, since Tyto Alba typically only breed once per year and average only two clutches in a life time? Of course, I am taking into account the weather in San Marcos, however scientific data is scientific data.

Barn owls can raise two or more broods per year. It can breed year round where climate permits.

<http://bna.birds.cornell.edu/bna/species/001/articles/introduction>

Breeding can occur any time during the year, depending on the food supply.

Not sure I understand where you're coming from. What scientific data are you referring to? From all I've read it is common for barn owls to have multiple clutches in one year, as many as three if the environment and food supply is conducive to it.

They average only two clutches in a lifetime simply because the average lifespan in the wild is about two years. And they don't mature until they are a year old, so that only leaves an average of one breeding season.

Don't have 'em yet, CJ - I walked to the eye doctors, dropped off my distance glasses and had to walk home wearing my computer glasses - which for all practical purposes meant I walked home nearly blind! The optometrist is putting them in my old frames and then will call me. They're tricky glasses - prescription is tricky, the prisms are tricky, and the lenses are very thick. It's crucial that they're aligned just the right way in the frames, so it takes longer. At least I can see my computer screen for the time being!!!!

That's the IMPORTANT thing, Jan. It can be your "reason" for not getting other things done for a few days. I can't see a thing walking around with my "puter glasses on. Have you ever considered bifocals or the "lineless" ones? I finally gave in to bifocals several years ago when I got tired of always having the wrong glasses on or having to wear one pair around my neck to catch the crumbs when I ate 😊. Even with bifocals, I often wear a cheap pair of off-the-shelf glasses while at the 'puter. It's the distance from the monitor thing. I've also found it more comfortable on my eyes to increase the print size here to 125% or even to 150% .

I've had bifocals for years, Lynda. I have distance/reading and computer/reading bifocals. I can't get the lineless or progressive lenses because my astigmatism is too great and the prisms needed to give me single vision take up too much room; the optometrist told me that to have all that in progressive lenses, each lens would have to be the size of my face!! ROTFL!

JH (Owls ≠ People)

Colleen, you are on the right track, according to my reading:

Courtship begins with display flights by males which are accompanied by advertising calls and chasing the female. During the chase, both the male and the female screech. The male will also hover with feet dangling in front of the perched female for several seconds; these are known as moth flights. Copulation occurs every few minutes during the nest site search. Both sexes crouch down in front of each other to solicit copulation. The male mounts the female, grasps her neck, and balances with spread wings. Copulation continues with decreasing frequency throughout incubation and chick rearing.

Hello ladies. I'm stopping by for a quick catch up and wonder if I may interject? Stacey O'Brien said that Wesley would sometimes mate with her arm and leave ejaculate. Other times he would merely bond and there would be no ejaculate. Now that Molly has completed laying eggs for this clutch, McGee is no longer fertilizing her, but the act of mating continues to strengthen the pair bond. Kinda like how there are no more eggs being released for the nine months a woman is pregnant, but couples will still be intimate during the pregnancy.

Jan (thinking like an owl)

Yes, Merritt - I researched this before (which is where Colleen got her information from.) There is the total act, but there is no fertilization because Molly is not releasing any more eggs. Owl eggs are released within the mother's body just as human eggs are; and the eggs are fertilized the same way human eggs are. If there are no eggs, there is no fertilization. The only difference between 'mating' and 'bonding' is the lack of fertilization. It is the act itself that bonds one to another.

Please "like" this if I have it right, then I know. There are times when McGee is doing the same exact thing as mating, but it just doesn't fertilize the egg because there isn't an egg, right?

Liked by JH \(Owls ≠ People\) Jan \(thinking like an owl\) Lynda C

Merritt

Not quite, Colleen. There are times when McGee is doing the exact same thing as mating, but it doesn't fertilize anything because there is no sperm. I may have misled you with my human pregnancy analogy, so let me rephrase: similarly to how female women produce no extra eggs while they are pregnant, male owls produce no ejaculate when they are bonding.

Oh, and now I see Jan and I are saying slight different things. I think it's more eggs being dropped by Molly at this time, but I definitely read the male barn owl doesn't produce sperm when he's merely bonding (vs. mating).

Yep, that's Patton. I have had a pair with 7 pups in the past. More fun that a person should ever have. The pups are the most adorable looking critters (to me) of all of them. A pair was no more trouble than one. Maybe not as much trouble. And a total delight. Good for you adopting from a shelter. I work with the Aiken SC SPCA, have for 8 yrs, and appreciate so much the people who care enough to love and nurture a needy animal. And spay and neuter to cut down on euthanizations. So heartbreaking and unnecessary. Don't get me started.

Good news, bad news for my day. Bad news, my cousin's daughter is in the hospital again. She was diagnosed with MRSA last month. Has been in and out of the hospital for 3 months. The lab work diagnosing her got 'lost' for 3 weeks! (long story) By then she had been flighted to a hospital in Seattle (from Aberdeen). She is an ICU nurse at the hospital in Aberdeen. She goes to see specialists in Seattle next week. Good news. My brother gets out of the hospital today. He has been in since the 19th. His vocal were paralyzed and they put in a trach. He still has it in, but is eating OK. Still hard to talk though. Please keep both Heather and my brother Mark in your thoughts. Thank you my friends.

So sorry to hear about your cusin's daughter and about your brother, Becky. Having been through those things only recently with our son-in-law, I can appreciate exactly what you and they are going through. The MRSA is such a scary, dreadful infection, becoming so prevalent today and so hard to treat, even with all of the newer, broad spectrum antibiotics. As the most likely place to contract it is right in the hospital - by patients and staff alike, it's even more scary. The thought of our son-in-law developing it because of his long hospitalization, open wounds, multiple surgeries, etc. it was always a on my mind. It's even worse that such important lab work was "lost".

Thoughts and prayers are with you all. Hugs.

They only lay what they can realistically raise successfully, with a normal margin of error, so to speak. It would be a complete waste of a partnership to produce more eggs (a very energy intensive process) than they could raise. Also, the great size differences in owlets hatched so far apart would mean almost certain death to the youngest in the brood.

I'm a little confused, too, Colleen. I understand what Owlo said (I think). I did think that the female had to have an egg yolk already there in order to be fertilized. Thus, if no yolk is there, no amount of mating or bonding is going to create a fertilized egg. That probably confuses things more 😊 😊

Guess I don't understand why you feel that way, Connie. It's all a very natural thing for owls to do. Barn owls mate for life and, while I don't usually humanize about owl behavior, I think about it as a way of showing that bond, love and attachment to each other.

Just a guess here, Annie. I'm not sure what a "webster" is. There are types of "water" spiders, but they usually have the ability to walk across the top of the water, especially in ponds and streams and not usually found in a house. It's very likely the spider was already in the machine when you started the water. Also likely that it was dead or in the process of doing so and the wave action of the water when you put the webster down into the tub simply moved the spider under the agitator. Most likely it would have gone out into the drain when the washer went into spin cycle. I don't think it is anything to be worried about.

Yesterday, 14:25:00 - Flag - Like - Reply

Lynda, yeah I've seen those "water-walking" bugs before... but this was a spider actually alive !!! A webster has a handle like a dustmop with a bristly dust catcher on the end of it (I used the handle and went down to near where he was sitting motionless... very slowly as to not move the water) It walked under the agitator !!! 😊 😊 😊

It is also possible that there is an air bubble trapped under the agitator.

The spider may have taken up residence inside the hollow agitator.

or it may have been one of these underwater spiders - http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Divng_bell_spider 😊

Tigermo...went back and read all about the job and sister...Gosh, that was ridiculous that the police didn't put something around that manhole...People just don't THINK anymore. She has a long recovery ahead...I wish her all the best.

Well, I've always remember that saying: "It's an ill wind that doesn't blow something good your way." So, even though this is not a way anyone would choose to slow down, maybe she will get a lot of TLC in recovery...hope so.

JH (Owls ≠ People)

There was discussion earlier about the owl activity in the BOT barn during daylight. Some have the impression that all barn owls are strictly nocturnal, and that is not the case. While Molly and McGee are very much nocturnal, it appears that many British barn owls are actually more crepuscular, meaning they are most active during the twilight hours centered around dusk and dawn. Several good videos on the net, from the UK area, documenting barn owls active and hunting during daylight.

Just a few:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Om9fB2AbwnM> - music warning, might want to lower the volume first.

Is that the same site you posted yesterday, Colleen ? I hadn't gotten back to look it over yet, but I did see the piece about Molly & McGee. I realized then that I had posted the paragraph about bonding here a couple of times. I had found the reference in a quick Google search about bonding, but never thoroughly checked the whole site.

I remember reading that when it was first posted. Lots of new discoveries since then. Just another one of the reasons I wish there was a truly moderated and much more focused discussion board available with this nest camera. I love all the banter and such but I would really like to sit in on a more scientific and professional discussion about the behaviors seen here. Think of a discussion board with the two videos on the side and long list of sticky topics where in-depth and informed discussion took place, discussion that didn't get pushed permanently off the page by all the chitchat. And a place where "poor" baby" and "pitiful" were trigger words for the spambot. 😊

Unlikely as she was only away for a couple of minutes - but thats not a problem as she is using very little energy at the moment and doesn't need much food - once the eggs have started hatching there will be much more being delivered. ... McGee seems to be delivering every other night and when he does deliver he does it properly - ie rabbit, rat, possum so that seems to be enough to keep her going - she certainly doesn't appear to be hungry at all.

There were some BIG somethings listed in the status box that morning, lisa. I'm sure some here with far better memories than mine could post some of the others. If you aren't familiar, there used to be a status box at the top of the video that would list times, food deliveries and visits through the night (and later during the fledging, the times and length of time each of the owlets went out). The stats were done my the U Stream chat monitors, but they won't be doing it this time. It takes too much volunteer time. It was so handy to check in and the morning to see what had happened.

Grrr, haven't been able to get to the site for over a half hour. I'm really going to date myself here, but seeing Molly's box captured in it lavender/purple phase below brought to mind a song sung by Burl Ives many years ago, "Lavender Blue". Probably a song some of you have never heard but even all the verses fit well with the Molly "experience" here -

"Lavender's blue, dilly dilly, lavender's green,
When I am king, dilly, dilly, you shall be queen.
Who told you so, dilly, dilly, who told you so?"

"Twas my own heart, dilly, dilly, that told me so. . . . etc.

About my sister... To good to leave so far down...She will be in the hospital 2-3 more days... Here is what happened. She was going to get her son at the Rec Center. It was 10:30 and dark. She parked and was walking to the building... there were 2-3 cops on the sidewalk talking to some kids and she was walking past them... and fell all the way into an Open Manhole!! The cops were there because the said kids had opened it up and had been throwing fire crackers or something in the storm drain. They were talking to the kids about how unsafe it is to be doing such a thing. No one warned her or anything. Thank goodness she didn't hit her face or head! It was chest high. By law... they couldn't 'help' her. They called an ambulance and her husband. Can you believe such a story

Oh my word....I am not pushing going legal on much but this sure sounds like a lawsuit. Have a friend that something similar happened but burns were involved and she got a settlement but took forever! Hope and pray for her recovery.

I know... I wished they would have just covered it up and then talked or stood over it while talking to the kids. She is lucky that that's all she hurt. I have a lot of police friends... so wasn't trying to bash them, I just think no one was thinking good!

So I have some questions. #1. Why wasn't one cop guarding the open manhole? #2. What law says they couldn't help her?? I am so sorry this happened to her!

They said that there could be a liability if she got hurt more taking her up and out of the manhole. Her husband helped the paramedics get her out! He is a special forces guy...

It's just horrible what your sister and the rest of you have been through because of these youths. Its hope they learnt a lesson from this. Shame the police officers didnt put the cover on first though. Love and hugs to your sister.

She shattered her knee and severed the tendon or whatever that sends the message to her upper leg muscles. She has screws in her knee and is in alot of pain. They say it will take about 8 months to deal with this and they hope it will get back to 'normal'. With 3 boys and a husband that is in the military... she's going to have fun.

I left my reply down below! Shoked to be honest! ... and as purple Texan says - I'm not normally one that would do the whole compensation thing - but I think that case more than calls for it!

Thank you for explaining. What a terrible thing to happen to her. Where does she live that "they couldn't help her"? Wouldn't their good human nature - kindness or thoughtfulness - just take over and you do the "right" thing and help her? Please keep us updated on her healing process. Hope it is a speedy recovery, but it sure doesn't sound like it is going to be.

Glad your sister is on the mend, tiger, but I'm appalled about any law that "they couldn't help her". Certainly, they had to call an ambulance, but any police officer/department I have ever been in contact with (my DH was in police work for several years and I was an EMT with a volunteer ambulance service for

 Good morning, YTQ. I, too, had to restock the "larder" this week. One of my least favorite jobs and I always end up with twice as many things than are on my list. I thought I might have to take out a mortgage on the house when I got to the cash register, the back of the Subaru was filled with bags and it took forever to put everything away. But, we gotta eat I guess. 😊

 Arrrrgh! I had a heck of a time getting to the chatroom this morning! Had to go to a cached version, then text only, then several links until it finally showed up!

OK, so. How are my favorite peeps this morning? 😊

 The chat has been slow to respond for me for a couple days now. I need to refresh often to see new posts, and even to see replies, as they are not streaming in reliably. I've answered a few questions lately that appeared to go unnoticed, only to find out later that I was the last in a long line of replies. Never had this issue for more than just a short while before.

 Hi, Kathryn. I've also had problems loading the site for the past several days. I've also had the same problems that James mentioned and have replied to things only to find a whole line of other replies. I've also had to refresh a lot more often, even when the chat isn't terribly busy.

 Or when the thread gets messed up and your reply comes under the wrong remark you were trying to reply to. Makes your comment stand out and look stupid sometimes

 Ditto to that cj and Jan. The whole comment thread gets out of whack and confused when that happens. It often leads to misinterpretations, too. I've also noticed many responses getting "hung up" on the right side of the page. It takes forever for some of them to "slide" back into the sequence at times.
