Kristi from VA You know, that's funny. I went to see that movie when it came out. I was in high school. The movie broke down. I never saw it!!! Did get a free pass. At the time, I didn't care. I was on a date. In hindsight, I should have cared and gone for another movie!!!! Today, 20:47:02 - Flag - Like - Reply

That sounds out of this world, Dorothy! My mother used to make extra stuffing on thanksgiving and bake it in loaf pans. Before I realized that the chat had gone down last night I made a comment twice (and they posted only to me) to someones story about grits being offered to a friend at a meal one time and the friend said "sure, I'll try a couple". It reminded me of a trip to FL several years ago with our children. We stopped for supper at a restaurant in NC and the waitress asked my 7 yr. old son if he wanted hush puppies with his meal. Not understanding her Southern accent, hepolitely and quietly leaned over to me and said, "Mom, what are "whoosh" puppies? " Today, 20:10:54 - Flag - Like - Reply

Kristi from VA Love Jodi - and that is a true to life book. My good friend has a daughter with Asperger's. She says its realistic. She wrote to Jodi, congratulating her, and Jodi wrote back. Handle with Care is the one about brittle bone disease. I was waiting for the newest one to come out in paperback. Jodi really does her research, it's amazing. During an earlier discussion about the analogy between "comatose" and "hibernation", I will admit to making that reference a couple of times lately. In an attempt to allay some fears about Molly not getting food every day and being hungry I mentioned that during her inactivity and the comatose state that she is sometimes in during sleep (and I thought that was correct) she doesn't require as much food as she does when she is active. I believe I also stated that her metabolism slows down while at rest (meaning specifically the metabolism of food). I also likened it somewhat to a bear in hybernation that can go months without food and draw on the stores of fat in their body. I can see that my explanation was not entirely scientifically correct and perhaps I oversimplified things in an attempt to explain in layman terms. 😬 😐

Hi all. I just caught up on the chat and was glad to see that Lissanne addressed the definition of copulation. I found it interesting that Lissanne said copulation can occur with or without eggs or sperm. So, I guess Stacey's observation that sometimes there wasn't sperm when Wesley humped her arm is moot. It all depends on cloacal apposition. In other words, if the owls' sex organs make contact, that's copulation. From what Lissanne said, it's not copulation if he just lands on her back.

I can't always tell what position their tails are in, so I kinda like the word "bonding" since regardless of the position of the tails, sex organ involvement, eggs, sperm, or lack thereof of any of those things, simply having body to body contact strengthens the pair bond. (Doesn't it?)

I love that we all want to understand what's going on. Nothing wrong with matter of fact, scientific, biological discussions.

Good evening MODS. Back for a while after a very long and somewhat stressful day and hoping to relax, chat a bit and watch Molly for a while this evening. It was a LONG trip back to the basement, but some very interesting and informative chat threads there. Thanks, JH, for doing the PDF. It was of the 1st times that I wished I had read DOWN thru the chat first instead of running down and working my way up 🙂 . I'll read the PDF in more depth later. In an off-handed way, yes it alludes to the monster controversy about which everyone is united in group-think. And, in answer to your second query, I'm asking questions about why something continues to happen. Today, 1:46:29 PM Today, 18:06:26 - Flag - Like - Reply

YTQ (getting over it) I, too am questioning why something continues to happen. Why do you take such offense to simple statements, void of sarcasm, critisim, or biting words? You must remember, Cheyenne, it was not this site and the people therein that caused this continuing verbal war. And your continuing to assume defensive posturing is getting old. We should be able to say something about the issue, without your green-headed monster popping up. I'll say it again; Get off your high horse. It makes you look bad. I find the fact the McGee controls the food intake interesting. Since she had a couple of rats last night, I wonder if he will bring anything tonight. Today, 18:04:58 - Flag - Like - Reply

Kasey, my layman's interpretation is that McGee does control the deliveries, BUT, I believe Molly calls in her orders from home. I seriously believe there is communication going on there between the two owls. McGee is not a mind reader, but I'm sure he knows what a certain squawk/chortle means. Why be defensive? This location has worked out for her before. It doesn't happen to look like the facility that other's would prefer, but it works! Hi everyone! I have about 15 minutes to check in here from sunny 103* FL panhandle. Took my mom to a sewing workshop this morning, SEW much fun! Then I took my dad to Staples to get some back to school supplies. He wanted to go by Big Lots but it's so hot and he tired of walking around. Everyone stay cool watching Molly nap. Wish I could. I'm sure I will after evening Mass.

I would like to thank everyone here for giving me one of the happiest moments of my day. No matter how stressful or tiring my day is, I just tune in here and enjoy the comradarie (sp?) and the beautiful birds. 🙂 I don't say it enough. From a grit-eating Southernor!

I loved WESLEY THE OWL book and have great admiration for Stacey. I missed whatever controversy happened here. From what I know she is concerned about people misunderstanding where it is appropriate to put owl boxes and she is cautious about interfering too much with nature. Maybe I'm just lucky I wasn't here whenever this controversy happened. When I finished the book I felt very connected to Stacey in the way she described the marvelous relationship she had with her WEsley. I admire that she devoted/sacrificed so much time and care for Wesley for 19 Years. I hope there was just some kind of misunderstanding and some feathers ruffled in the communications that have some lingering negativity toward her.

Cheryl Owen Carlos has been on and said it was definitely McGee after reviewing visits at 4.10 and 4.48 on the outside cams - the other chat room were saying it was a strange Owl that delivered food on the 4.48 visit - that one was definitely McGee as far as I could see. I'm 99% sure that it was probably McGee on the 4.10 visit where no food was delivered - but Carlos could only go on the outside video and didn't see Mollys behaviour at that time so personally I still have that 1% doubt - but I'm most likely wrong 😐 😀

😬 Good Saturday Morning All! And a lovely day it is. All of 61 degrees here, with clouds and possible drizzle later. Yesterday thunder and lightening to the north of us, and a little shower, that got the pavement wet.

I just worked my way out of the basement and y'all gave me some talking points for later! Quite a discussion on "bonding" and the correct terms to use. I personally like the term "bonding" and I think Carlos came up with that term to describe the actions to keep the show G-rated. Not that using correct terminology is R-rated. I thought he was thinking about sensitivity issues. IMO.

I read Wesley the Owl and in it, Stacy comments about him "bonding" on her arm and leaving the evidence. (page 189) So probably there is sperm each time M&M "bond".

I must leave a disclaimer her. I am not a fan of The Author of the book, but the story was good.

Guest I just purchased a paperback of this book for $3.00 and am looking forward to reading it. I would never have spent full price on it, but for $3.00 I was glad to get it and doubt the author will profit from my purchase as the book was bought from second hand party and is brand new. I am no fan of the author either, but want to read the story of a human and barn owl co-existing and sharing life together.

Hello James. Thought you'd show up. Don't need to define it, the intent is clear.

JH (Owls ≠ People)

No, I am afraid your intent is not clear. You seem to have a very odd sense of what you call bashing, and I think it would benefit the discussion if you defined what bashing is to you. (you are trying to have a discussion, right?) The comments above are personal opinions. Ones that many people here share. You may not appreciate it and that is fine, but you are the only one instigating, by apparently insisting that others refrain from stating that they are not fans of the author. An author who has made some really bizarre off-the-cuff accusations and inflammatory statements in public. Would you like to see some concrete examples shown of why people are not fans of said author? All her own words, of course.

Maybe try having a little perspective and drop the overprotective act. Today, 15:46:43 – Flag – Like – Reply Liked by 📕 Bette 🎯 Colleen 🖉 cj in fl 📷 Jan (thinking like an owl) 🔤 Jane 🌠 Cheryl Owen 📷 YTQ (getting over it)

Oh James, James. Outright attack, as you yourself have been known to instigate, or wink-wink innuendo, among other forms of word-play constitute continued "bashing". It's not a question of what I appreciate, it's that no opportunity is missed to allude to "the author" as a negative. Why can't people just comment on likes and dislikes about the book without going "there"?

I am not overprotetcive and it's not an act. It genuinely ticks me off.

I figured you would show up. I did NOT bash Stacy. I simply said I wan't a fan of hers. I'm not a fan of you, either. Nor am I a fan of 100 degree heat, storms or broken fingernails.

The only thing I have against Stacy is all the harping she did about this nest box, and Carlos not doing it right.

She wrote a good book about life with a barn owl. After watching this nest, I think she got some things wrong. That being said, the two are completely different circumstances. One was a barn owl that lived with a human; these are wild barn owls. so of course there would be differences. (continued down)

This box took the spotlight off her, and you resent that. When I go to her website, I see diparaging and condescending remarks made by her and directed at Molly and McGee, and by extention, Carlos and all of the rest of us that watch this box. Sholud I jump on her? No. I just quietly leave; she is entitled to her opinion. Instead of being so confrontational, she needs to join forces with these owl box endeavors. She could probably teach, and learn.

So, please Cheyenne, get off your high horse, and quit making riduclous accusations. It makes you look so bad! Today, 16:00:42 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by 👿 cj in fl 🌉 Jan (thinking like an owl) 🧱 Jane 🏣 Bette

Was waiting for "continued below" but don't see it. So we have a mutual "not a fan of yours" society. Fine, Whether or not she "got some things wrong" would not be adequately judged by watching ONE other nest. If you read ALL the extensive material available on Barn Owls you'll see contadictions amongst the professionals. It's an organic process. Witness the "bonding" discussion.

And, while the "harping" may have been really, really unpleasant, it did, I believe result in positive changes and a very good outcome. Today, 16:42:07 - Flag - Like - Reply

YTQ (getting over it)

Do you see the "continued down" part now? I see it on my screen. maybe you need to refresh.

I have watched every barn owl site I have been able to find. I currently have 47 bookmarked sites with extensive information about barn owls. I read about them every day. There is no way I could ever read all that is written about them. I know that there is no positive consensus among the professionals. For instance, I was researching "Are Barn Owls Territorial?" It's about five to one that they are not; only protective of their nest. They can, according to some, live compatibably close to other barn owls. (Pictures to follow

I agree that the "harping" brought about needed changes. I also believe those same changes could have been made w/o harping, accusations, and inyour-face confrontations, with a positive approach instead of the negative tone we all witnessed.

Cheryl Owen Normally when McGee turns up or is anywhere in the near vicinity, Molly starts with the fairly loud 'food' call that she does. Well this time the Owl turned up on the Kestrel Box and she didn't make a sound, when it eventually landed on the Owl Box she got up and was looking up - as in the screen shot, but instead of a food call, she was just making a fairly quiet 'twittering' sound - It wasn't a distress call and she didn't appear agitated or upset - but it was definitely not her 'normal' behaviour when McGee turns up. When he did turn up with food half hour later she was making her normal noises again. Just watching video of the outside Owl wouldn't really tell you anything, but if Carlos had video of her behaviour then he would be able to tell us whether or not he had witnessed it before with the last brood. In the 1940s, a professor in California discovered a poor-will snuggled into a rock cavity in the Chuckawalla Mountains. The bird's body temperature was more than forty degrees below normal, no heartbeat could be detected, no moisture appeared on a cold mirror placed in front if its nostrils, and there was no response to light shined in its eyes. The results of these tests left little doubt that the bird actually was hibernating. An identifying band was placed on its leg, and each year for the next four years the same poor-will was found hibernating in its rocky niche. Since that discovery, several other reports of hibernating poor-wills have been confirmed. The name given to the poor-will by the Hopi Indians is Holchko, which means "the sleeping one. That's a new one on me, I haven't heard or seen the term hibernation used by anyone. Must have missed it. But hibernating is not the same thing as going into a comatose-like state while sleeping. Molly is pretty much at rest most of the day now and using very little energy. When she sleeps she does appear to be in a comatose-like state, at least for short periods of time. But that is not hibernating and there is no reason to suspect that her body temp would drop much below normal, if it drops at all.

There's an interesting aspect to this, however. At higher altitudes nights are cold, hummingbirds enter 'torpor'. Not hibernation, just a dramatic decrease in metabolic rate, respiration, body temp - the works. What about incubating/brooding hummers? The female remains euthermic (i.e., keeps normal body temp) during incubation & while she broods the young. However, there comes a point when there's not enough place for the three of them on the nest (also, by that time the young have developed thermoregulatory capabilities). The female then goes off to roost by herself. The young remain euthermic in the nest, the female becomes torpid - to make it through the night. Amazing switch for the female between these 2 metabolic states in just 24 hours. Today, 12:52:39 - Flag - Like - Reply

In his talk this morning, Carlos mention that Molly was in a 'comatose or hibernating-like state' when sitting on the eggs. Obviously, it's not a good analogy because it has engendered the idea that Molly is hibernating. She seems to me more like in a trance-like state or, as I think of it, 'zoning out.' Ouch! I wish he wouldn't say these things...... He means so well!! However, people take his words literally and more than one misconception has been born as a result. Jan (thinking like an owl) You're so right, Lissanne! Speculation has a way of becoming 'fact' in an alarmingly short period of time, especially when it comes from someone who is perceived as knowledgable. I try very hard to back up everything I say with at least a few published sources, but I find myself guilty sometimes of drawing the wrong conclusions from available facts. I agree with you completely, Lissanne! But there's a real problem when you speculate in front of people who have almost no knowledge of biology and behavior - they tend to take our speculation as fact. I've seen it happen time and again in this chat room, and as a result people come away from here 'knowing' things that aren't true. This is why I'm skittish about speculation here. The speculation you are talking about has your knowledge of birds as it's jumping-off point - you know what is fact and what is speculation. I've been wracking my brain trying to figure out how to implement a moderated discussion page with the video always visible on the sidebar, but I so far haven't figured out how to do so using freely available tools. I believe I would need to manage my own server space and host a customizable discussion board on it to enable that. Problem is I have neither the funds nor the experience to set that up. It would likely take me longer to do so than the unhatched owlets will be around. If anyone has other ideas please toss them out there. I do enjoy the chat here, but I am also very interested in finding another venue with more meat.

I see, Jan. Carlos is in a pickle by trying to translate his layman observations to the masses, using terminology that most people will understand. I guess the problem is that some people take his observations quite literally and don't use their critical thinking skills to analyze and compare what he says to what they are seeing. Then there are those who take it personally and go ballistic at times. That's always fun.  $\stackrel{(\bigcirc}{=}$

Lissane, I thought all hummingbirds went into a state of torpor at night, not just the females, where the nights are cool. Or is the point that the females can switch off the normal cycles of torpor while incubating?

Heh, terminology is another real problem in the chat, James, which is one reason I made my early-morning post. Unless everyone agrees on the definition of a term, it is useless! Were this a classroom, we would all have a list of definitions that were irrefutable. But here we are, people from all walks of life, many of whom have never sat down and discussed bird behavior before. Critical thinking skills can only go so far when trying to deduce the behavior of birds if people have no background of basic animal biology. This is not their fault, nonetheless, it presents a huge problem in attempting to explain what is going on in front of their eyes. Added to that problem is the fact that no one is in the chat 24/7, so there are always going to be people who miss vital information when it IS posted!

Exactly, Jan! Hence my comment yesterday about wishing for another discussion board with this nest camera. One moderated and used for more professional level discussion of the activities. Many experts in the field would never join in a discussion here, due to the nature of the informal and open chat. It would be marvelous to sit in and read actual informed scientific discussion about the activities here, and have that resource available long term, not scrolling off the screen with every new post.

Of course someone took even that comment the wrong way and went ballistic.  $\textcircled{ extsf{eq}}$ Today, 14:03:21 – Flag – Like – Reply Liked by 🎯 Colleen 🙀 Owlosaurus (aka Techno-Twinkie) 🌉 Jan (thinking like an owl) 🕎 cj in fl 🔎 lissanne 🔚 Bette

People do it all the time. "Bear country" is a very vague term. All of the NC mountains, a large portion of the low country, and vast expanses of other areas in the state are home to black bears. People tent camp in all those places all the time. It just means you take proper precautions and know the behavior of the bears. Now, if you're talking about grizzly country, then all bets are off, at least for me, but black bears are really not much of an issue if you know what you're doing.
