Live Barn Owl Nest Box Cam - San Marcos, CA

This is a live feed of a wild female barn owl named Molly. The owl box is located 15 feet off the ground. The male (McGee) has a white chest and face. He usually shows up after dark but has spent an entire day with the female. For more information about the owls and this cam. Click Here.

Kathy, if you scroll back to your original questions you'll see answers. Molly only stops by the nest to deliver food now. She isn't there during the day. You have to watch at night to catch her visits and they usually only last a couple seconds.

For those following my saga of trying to save some of the chat history here, using Windows:

I just had success with a free program which allows you to "Print" a PDF of this page, including comments.
 (the Adobe Reader program/driver did not work for me)

The free program is <http://www.dopdf.com/>
 It's a customizable print driver and appears to work like a charm.
 You can select how many pages to print, depending on how many comments you have showing.
 It even allows you to create text-searchable PDFs, sweet!

This picture Carlos took really helps clarify why owls were so terrifying to people without flashlights, streetlights, etc. It could be seen as a disembodied spirit in the moonlight since owls fly so quietly.

Barb, I had some very similar thoughts looking through those pictures. Imagine sitting outside under a full moon or near a campfire and seeing something like that coming in to land in the tree behind you! I've read that some owls are actually attracted to such campfires due to the additional light, which aids their hunting somewhat. I suppose it also was common for more rodents to be around where there were people and food/trash.

James, while it's the "quiet before the storm" I wanted to tell you again how much I'm continuing to enjoy your amazing photos. You seem to cover all the bases (portraits, landscapes, close-ups, etc.), and you do everything so well. Really, you are very, very gifted.

And, by the way, thanks so much to you, Latrippi, Merritt et al for the wiki page. Don't know if I'll be able to contribute to it in any way, but it is certainly nice to be able to refer to it.

Thanks you once again, Natalie. You're too kind. Much of the 'gift' is really in the equipment, but I have learned by studying from some outstanding mentors. The website which hosts my work is full of very talented people. Spend some time browsing around and looking at some of their work.

Browsing the "Most Popular Photos" link on Smugmug is a beautiful way to spend the afternoon. Once there, click the slideshow link (top-right) and sit back for a while, enjoying some great stuff.

And you ARE contributing, very much so, by hanging out here and helping to answer questions about the owls; submitting fine riddles, jokes, and poems; spreading good cheer; and generally being a good sport. 😊

I think I read somewhere, Molly will come back to the box to teach them to fledge. Somebody correct me if that isn't right. I also think the O&O owls are a lot smaller than these, so Mom still needs to help them out. She will probably be leaving their nest soon.

With the wiki, we are trying to organize all sorts of information/links/stories/poems about Molly &amp; family, and barn owls in general. All in a easy to locate/navigate location. Both Carlos and Hunting Fishing have been agreeable to the idea. There is also a updated Activity Update (aka the Blue Box Info), kept on the sidebar of the front page. Thanks to Latrippi for setting up the wiki and getting things rolling. 😊

For those who missed it, Carlos had a little fun last night doing a (two) live interview(s) with the author, Eric Blehm. Eric is the author writing the Molly ebook. Worth watching. Funny also, in that they 'recorded' the entire interview twice - the first time it didn't broadcast, and no one had a clue they were even talking but Carlos and Eric. The second go round - they had the camera set to 'mirror image', so everything came out reversed on screen.

He is at the limit of the camera, and is also limited in panning by the hole cut in the box, which the camera is looking through. Occasionally you will see the edges of that hole in the corners of the picture. There has been a little owl fuzz sticking to the edges of the hole for a few days, blowing in the breeze.

They were frightened by a lawn mower yesterday and all congregated in the back of the box (much to the viewers delight) At night they are right at the door to be first in line for any food brought in. I think that as long as they feel safe, they stay there, just in case someone brings them a morsel to eat.

Latrippi posted a link on the wiki for last night's chat and poetry jam.

The link goes to our new Molly wiki and the PDF link on that page will enable you to download a copy of our chat from last night. The 64 pages of chat starts (at the bottom) at 7:40PDT and runs through about 12:40PDT (at top.) The time stamps are all CDT. A great resource for those who may have trouble scrolling back that far, or those who just couldn't keep up with all the fun that was streaming in.

JL, Latrippi used a feature in Google Chrome to save the chat to a PDF. Apparently she scrolled back as far as she could, opening collapsed threads, and then used the "Save page as..." feature in Chrome to save a PDF. Great stuff! I'll do the same from here on out, since it saves the photos, screen names, and everything just like it appears on screen. Love that she figured it out. Maybe we could set up a regular schedule to share the burden of doing this nightly??

You can email me your PDF, if you like. Send it to james(at)jmhphoto.com Thanks for capturing and posting everything you did on the wiki!

It's natural for her to move out of the nest once the owlets can eat on their own. As soon as Wesley, the youngest/smallest, swallowed his first whole mouse, Molly has been mostly gone. She spent one day with them when the weather was bad but I'm sure it was because she wanted out of the rain, not because she felt the owlets needed her.

They need to learn to eat on their own and be on their own. The next step may be that we see the delivery of more live prey so they can catch it inside the nest. Once they decide it's time to fly, they'll probably roost in nearby trees for 2 or 3 weeks while Molly and McGee teach them to hunt. Then they'll fly off on their own.

Yes, although I'm not a regular, I think it's okay that Molly lovers have gotten to know each other and chat about other things during lull in owl activity -- and it seems to be mostly animal/children-related things. Everyone is quick to flag comments that are inappropriate, and I think we've all learned not to talk about those comments, which just gives them more exposure.

I find it nice that people have a chat. During daylight hours, now that it's difficult to see into the nest box, it would be very quiet in here. I think you'll have to find a less popular site (not difficult) if you don't want people chatting. Thinking back there are quite a few posts here about things other than owls like the eagles, cardinals, hummingbirds and wildlife in general.

Exactly my point, Pat. So much to chat about... eagles/cardinals/hummingbirds/wildlife/other webcams... and the haikus/poems are clever and fun during quiet times. Even the chats about weather and family and the rest. The only thing I find inappropriate is when people post they have to leave to use the restroom... or they're back from the restroom... Just my opinion. 😊

I'm sure everything is happening in it's natural progression. If Molly is not there, it must be okay, because animals operate on instinct and know just what to do, and when to do it.

my guess is that they will go their separate ways in order to find proper food supplies, nesting areas, etc. and will not have the need to "know" one another. They will also all need to find a partner for life, so if they do turn out to be all Maxines, can you imagine the squabble for the most handsome male?? Just sounds to me that nature knows better to encourage a family reunion amongst raptors.

And also, the babies need to learn to be on their own. When M and M bring food, they are now feeding themselves. Soon they will fly and be on their own, so this is just part of the progression to them being grown up. It would be like us wondering why you let your child go to college....on his own....

For those who missed it, Carlos had a little fun last night doing a (two) live interview(s) with the author, Eric Blehm. Eric is the author writing the Molly ebook. Worth watching. Funny also, in that they 'recorded' the entire interview twice - the first time it didn't broadcast, and no one had a clue they were even talking but Carlos and Eric. The second go round - they had the camera set to 'mirror image', so everything came out reversed on screen. 😊

The successfully recorded interview is online here: <http://www.ustream.tv/recorded/6422063>

While the owlets are sleeping you might want to check out this other amazing site of Bald Eagles over looking the ocean in Santa Catalina. Each pair have two babies and there is usually some action going on there. Molly's box is everyone's favorite hands down but this site is one not to miss too in my opinion.

He put it up yesterday afternoon. Apparently it is much closer to the box than the camera angle reveals. One corner of the landing pad is actually under the nest box. It's also not very far away from the box. A matter of inches, I think he said.

If you posted poetry that was lost when the Facebook site went down, or if you have written some since then, you can send it to Debi Strong at bfbear@centurytel.net with your real name so you can be credited. Even if Eric does not use your poem or any poems, Debi will still create a booklet. (And she did ask someone to pass the word, so I am not making this up! 😊)

Carlos put that up yesterday. It's a landing pad for the owlets once they start to fledge. In a tree they wouldn't make it to the ground if they fell because of the branches so this is one more step so they don't fall 15 feet to the ground if they don't get it right.

This is a cute cartoon from the 1940's that was posted yesterday, about a family of 4 little talented owlets. In the next lull, it might make entertaining viewing.

Hoping not to offend anyone's beliefs here, but I just read an article about the barn owl and its symbolism in different cultures & religions. For example: Siberian Shamans believe the Barn Owl is the symbol of 'persistence during difficult situations'. Interesting... Molly certainly has stood steadfast in her own difficult situations, wouldn't we all agree? (unhatched eggs, windstorms, live prey being accidentally dropped into the owl box, barking dogs, the WORLD staring at her...etc?) 😊

The trick is to poke the owlets to move them away from the inside night cam lens. They are bunched up against it and we can't see inside because of them! So, the inside is the picture in a picture of white fluff that you see, and the outdoor came gets the bigger screen.

JL, are you still here? I looked for a haiku in your chat history and I love the one you posted 45 minutes ago. I don't see it in the general chat history, though, so did you delete it? It's perfect! Both in the syllabication and the imagery. You did really good! Was that the first you you wrote that you said no one saw?

Merritt, I looked too. I found two in her chat history but not on the general one. Copy and save them so you can check them out the next time she gets back on. Let's hope she does. There is always so much going on here it is hard to catch it all, especially if she has put it in a reply.

Chris, I did copy the first one I came to. I'll go back and look for the other one you found. She's done so much for us by posting lots of poems for other people on the new wiki site, and you know how that is, having done the same for that FB page. I don't want her own poems to be overlooked!

Typically they both come by shortly after dark and then disappear for quite a while. They then make another round after a few hours. It all depends on what they're hunting and what size prey they bring in. But if we've learned on thing watching them, it's that they are not as predictable as we'd like them to be. 😊

Interesting Fact - (yes, I'm channelling HF right now) If the natural sounds of nighttime owlets bothers you, mute the sound on the main video, and turn UP the sound on the smaller video. You can still barely hear the owlets (about as much as Carlos says he can hear them) but you should still be able to hear the parents land on the box. Plus, there's a nice "white noise" with the outdoor sounds. 😊

One other thing to note: the mic in the box is extremely sensitive, so ALL the noises in the box appear much louder than they actually are. I know we joke about the ear-splitting screeches and squawks, but a lot of that is due to the sensitivity of the mic. Listen to the outdoor mic and be comforted. Maybe. Just a little.
