	Lynda C She's off again. As much as I would like to have her stay for the day for the sake of those who want one more day to watch her, a part of me wants her to fly away for the next stage of her life. It will make Carlos' decision to turn off the cameras today much easier for us - and, surely much easier for him. I can only imagine the uproar and complaints if he has to stand by his decision if she is still in the owl box. LOL Today, 06:25:37 - Flag - Like - Reply Jan (Bayonne, NJ) Good morning, all you great people! ☺ For anyone interested, here's how the owls learn to hunt: They fly with their parent(s) to the 'hunting ground.' The parents start hunting. The owlets
	 watch. They get the idea. They try it. They try it again. And then again and again till they finally catch something. They learn from this catch. They use the experience they've gained and get a little bit more successful. And so on. It's not quick, it's not easy. Some never get it right. But many of them do, after much practice. For the last couple of months I've opened one eye looked at the clock and figured what time it was in CA and then thought Oh I'd better get up and see if Carrie's still there. Guess we'll just have to try and imagine her eventually joining the group and the Royals "having fun" at their reunion and everything right with the world? But it's sure gonna be hard on a lot of us. 66	KBOrlando The night before the cameras went down on the first clutch, I was a wreck. I was depressed about the whole experience being over. I thought I would never connect with the people from the chat again. I didn't know if Carlos would ever turn on the cameras again or if owls would return to the nest box. But I was so ready to get some sleep and to turn my attention back to my job! Like I said: I was a wreck. But within a few days I realized the chat would continue and that many of us are connected in a way that can't be severed by flipping a switch on a camera. And then the owls immediately returned and I knew this once-in-a-lifetime event might not be as fleeting as I feared. 	K8Orlando So 4 months later and we're back to the same spot. This time though I am not sad. I'm confident the owls will be back, the people will be back and the fun will continue. Next time we'll have an army of owl watchers saying "Don't worry, the owls will be fine!" Today, 03:46:56 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by Deb (in Thailand) Annie (in Illinois) T. 	 K8Orlando I'm off to work and may not be able to chat today, although I'll be looking in when I can. (workin' and lurkin'!) I posted the above comments last night but am posting them this morning since I don't see all of you in the evenings. I've cherished the mornings, when I could get up, turn on the computer and instantly see friendly faces (avatars?), check out George's pictures, and get an update on owl activity. Watching in the morning has been my favorite time and something exciting often happened! Hugs to you all! Kate
