Somebody said something about brownies earlier. I wish they hadn't done that because now I want want one. But, I think it's high time I went to bed, so I am going to forgo the sweet. I leave my cravings to you. 😊

See you owl once it's really a new day. This night has been wonderful.

Oh My Lord, we've been Blessed
For Molly came back to the nest at 4:04
Where has she been no one know's
Maybe just out getting her rest
she has'nt been seen since 4-24
Now, we all can take a deep oowlish breath.

Oh golly! I missed that. Scrolling back through the moderated chat (I hope it isn't irritating for me to quote from it, but Carlos generally has a pretty good idea of what's going on since he has access to views we don't): " 1:21 carlosroyal: I looked at the sequence of pictures and Molly was on the landing first. The(then) flew to the perch to hand off a mouse"

So SOMEBODY here was right. Or more than one somebody, wasn't it? Clever watchers.

Earlier someone there said, "one owl flew towards the box from the ladder area but did not land and one owl flew towards the box from the top left corner of the screen but kept going." Carlos will post the photos in the morning but seems like there was a double fly-by.

Hoping not to offend anyone's beliefs here, but I just read an article about the barn owl and its symbolism in different cultures & religions For example: Siberian Shamans believe the Barn Owl is the symbol of 'persistance during difficult situations' Interesting....Molly certainly has stood steadfast in her own difficult situations, wouldn't we all agree? (unatched eggs, windstorms, live prey being accidently dropped into the owl box, barking dogs, the WORLD staring at her...etc? 😊)

Can only see the owl box on the outside--is it just me or is there a trick to seeing inside

Today, 23:08:31 - Flag - Like - Reply

The trick is to poke the owlets to move them away from the inside night cam lens. They are bunched up against it and we can't see inside because of them! So, the inside is the picture in a picture of white fluff that you see, and the outdoor came gets the bigger screen.

Typically they both come by shortly after dark and then disappear for quite a while. They then make another round after a few hours. It all depends on what they're hunting and what size prey they bring in. But if we've learned on thing watching them, it's that they are not as predictable as we'd like them to be. 😊

Interesting Fact - (yes, I'm channeling HF right now) If the natural sounds of nighttime owlets bothers you, mute the sound on the main video, and turn UP the sound on the smaller video. You can still barely hear the owlets (about as much as Carlos says he can hear them) but you should still be able to hear the parents land on the box. Plus, there's a nice "white noise" with the outdoor sounds. 😊

One other thing to note: the mic in the box is extremely sensitive, so ALL the noises in the box appear much louder than they actually are. I know we joke about the ear-splitting screeches and squawks, but a lot of that is due to the sensitivity of the mic. Listen to the outdoor mic and be comforted. Maybe. Just a little.

The Story of Dave the Buzzard Man

One night, during a long lull in the action which nevertheless failed to drive anyone away, a poster named Dave commented that we would all probably watch a bunch of buzzards, and he signed off shortly thereafter. A few days later, the Royals went out of town, and though they had left the night cam on, it went out. We stayed glued to the screen nonetheless, writing poems to keep us entertained. James Hill brought up "the guy" who had mentioned the buzzards, and wondered what he would think of us now. Lo and behold, Dave the Buzzard Guy replied. He was there, right along with us! We have loved him ever since.

Wonderful! But -- one small thing. (Hermeneutics of the owl watchers.) I thought he was suggesting that we "wouldn't" watch a bunch of buzzards, pointing out the difference in how we value predators and scavengers (and calling that into question). Dave, are you here?

Today, 21:59:30 - Like - Reply - Delete

Hermeneutics of the owl watchers. That's funny. Yeah, I think you're right. Something about my story didn't ring exactly right to me, but I didn't know how to fix it, and didn't want to take the time to look through his chat history! He quotes himself below. I actually think watching buzzards would be interesting. Difficult, but interesting. They, too, are important scavengers. But I did wonder, if we would watch buzzards if since they are not as "cute".

Yes, scavengers are important -- they keep the roads clear of roadkill, for one thing. They clean up after us! But we don't think they're noble, the way we do raptors. Or even, cute.

Kathy O'Conner shared these rules for her cinquain:

The one I usually use with my students who are young is Line 1: one word (subject or noun)

Line 2: two words (adjectives) that describe line 1

Line 3: three words (action verbs) that relate to line 1 (can be phrase!)

Line 4: four words (feelings or a complete sentence) that relates to line 1

Line 5: one word (synonym of line 1 or a word that sums it up)

A purely syllable driven way to write a cinquain is to write a five line poem where the lines have 2, 4, 6, 8, 2 syllables each, in that order.

Either method you employ is just fine! Let the words flow through you and come out as they will!

It is, actually (at least, to me). We make light because we're used to hearing it now and trust that food is on the way. It is the 'natural order' but still they're very hungry and helpless, on their own.

Think of it as an encouraging sound, which it is. It evolved as a way to encourage the parent owls to hunt for the owlets. They make this vocalization, which the parents do hear, and it keeps the parents informed of the need for food. It is in no way a sad or pitiful sound, since even well fed owlets make it. (Just not those currently experiencing food coma! 😊)

But I agree, chickadees explanation if a lot more fun. Think... mom..mom..mmmmooooommm.....

'Cause those aren't as easy! A cinquain is a short poem consisting of five, usually unrhymed lines containing, respectively, two, four, six, eight, and two syllables. If you can do one, we would love to see it!

This might be a good time to repeat something I posted at 2:15am (CST) on April 24: If anybody is still here from the discussion that was below about saving all the poems, I want to clarify something. When I wrote I'm saving the best of 'em, that was in reply to Dave the buzzard man about my own poetry. I haven't been saving anybody else's poems.

The little ones have recently begun making this same vocalization & it's around the time dinner is delivered. I just think it's normal Owl vocalizations. I didn't study nor did I look it up. If someone has a more definitive answer, I am sure they will help you. I didn't want you to think you were being ignored. Enjoy the feeding. Coming soon!

No such thing as a stupid question...It' is a platform/porch/perch Carlos added about a week ago to give Molly & Company more room to perch.

I just missed Carlos...from reading the other messages, he must have enhanced what he added last week. Sorry if I was wrong about the timetable.

There's a wiki where we're collecting poems and posts now. It includes a timeline documenting events in the Molly-world and (secondarily) in this chat stream. This could be a great way to give Eric B a sense of what's been going on here! Find the wiki here:

JL Gawlik kindly took the time to copy over a bunch of haiku last night. And Mollie created a terrific page of Owl Resources and another of fun stuff -- owl videos and such. Thanks to them both!
