Our flights in the evening..
Are what McGee I live for..
Knowing we have 4 mouths to feed..
For whom we both adore..

They are never left alone..
For I could never leave their side..
I am just teaching them...
To prepare for their new ride...

My eye is on them always...
You can rest assured of this...
And before they fly off, there will be one last and loving kiss..
McGee and I will never forget YOU for watching over them..

You see I too have good eyes.. and do sense all of your concerns and love
And soon and most of all ,know that you too... want their freedom....

For those wondering about the "treat" left/dropped/kicked on the porch. Carlos explained to us yesterday that there are two owl pellets out on the porch. They were displaced from inside the box by owlets jockeying for position near the door. I guess you could call them treats of days gone by. With the sun and wind working on them, they now DO appear to be mice, etc. laying there, because of course that's what they were at one time. 😊

This picture shows them pretty well. Directly beneath Molly. (Click to enlarge for full detail)

Obsessive worriers. Carlos put them on because some people were truly worried that the babies would fall out or when then began to fly it was too far from the tree or the tree wouldn't support their weight.

Some people were worrying that the little ones might fall when they first start to leave the box and fly.

Carlos put up the landing pad to calm their worries.

Not to belabor the obvious, but owls have been fledging for at least 80 million years, WITHOUT landing pads. You'd think that would be enough to assuage the chronic worry-warts.

I thought I read in an earlier post that some type of treat was left on the platform - can kinda see a lump on the left - maybe that is what the owlets are looking at

Today, 09:35:10 - Flag - Like - Reply

At first I though someone dropped a treat, but now I'm thinking it might have been a pellet knocked out of the box. That happened the other night, and someone last night said the owls were cleaning house. And, I would be surprised if the 'rents left a treat on the porch. I would expect them to see it and toss it inside.

Barb, That had to be a sad moment to witness in such a public arena, i wonder if that person realized it?

It is really scary in our techno age how many people are NOT aware of the world around them. In my opinion many people have stifled their instinct/intuition by their lack of common knowledge. It is really sad to see, especially a parent with children, who will teach them?

That has been one of the fascinating things about watching this owl family and other families out in the wild, they all give their offspring the tools to survive. A big lesson we all could benefit from, especially the younger viewers.

I guess my age is showing... *G*

Just my thoughts...

Some of us have been having a lot of fun with poetry on this board, and an easy kind of poem anyone can write is call a haiku. A haiku is a non rhyming poem with 3 lines of 17 syllables: 5 syllables in the first line, 7 in the second, 5 in the third. Those are the only technical rules. Traditionally, a haiku is about something in nature, and the three lines together express a complete thought. You can use any punctuation appropriate throughout, and any kind of word, so long as it fits the syllabication. Try it; you'll like it!

Ok I have some dumb questions.....The owl box glows at night. Is there a light in there? What is that platform down below? Does Molly only bring food then leave? Does Mcgee still come around? I haven't been around for a while and every time I come back there is something new. Thanks!

Today, 08:16:20 - Flag - Like - Reply

I think the glow is from the infared camera picking up body heat. There is no light out there. It is pitch black. The platform is for when the owlets begin to fledge. (to please the worry warts) 😞 Molly no longer stays in the box. Both hunt and bring treats every night now.

Quite a few people on the chat site are asking Carlos if would publish a book with all the great photos he has taken of this experience. I for one would love it for the memories and good people we have met on this site. When this is over it would be great to have a book to look back on. I will send him a letter a little later with an idea. He can put those photos in a gallery on a website similar to one I use, where people can create their own books. The books can then be sold/shared with anyone and Carlos maintains full control over his images and receives proceeds from the book/image sales. I think there are a lot of very creative people out here (and in his chat room) who would do a marvelous job creating many versions of a photo book. That would relieve Carlos from any further workload and give everyone a chance to choose what style they like. Love the idea of peppering one with chat snippets!

I hope somebody is pulling out the good chat items when they happen. Or I hope somebody has access to the entire log. There are only 4,500 items, each with an average of 2-3 responses, so it's not a daunting job. Maybe somebody could obtain the log and distributed to several people who would be willing to go through it and pull the ones they think are worth saving. Then those people's choices could be pooled, de-duped, and worked on.

For a novice computer geek Carlos has come a long way and we sure appreciate it. Don't know how Donna feels though with her kitchen not hers anymore lol
I find it hard to believe some comments made by a very few watchers that many of us has sent donations to the Royals to help pay for the over $6000 he has spent since this whole wonderful experience has opened up this world for us. Carlos has never asked for any donations so this is not a money making experience he was looking for. I for one am grateful and so are the many others that wanted to help out. Just my opinion so don't take it the wrong way.

Have a super owlie day. 😊

Thais, I check on Tawny a couple of times a day. She is awesomely beautiful. And what a voice she has !! I'm most curious to see how her owlets develop in that treehole. I can't even imagine that they would fit once they're a month old or so. Maybe she'll move them. Who knows?

She only comes at night now. When McGee comes he drops off food and flies away. Molly says and and looks at her owls for a while. It would seem that she was kicked out but the last time she was in the box the little (?) owls stayed in one corner and allowed her to be alone sleeping most of the day.

There are very good photos of the deliveries, including one of Molly and an owl "talking," at the Molly blog:

I would think that Molly and McGee can hear them.
I read where Barn Owls have the best hearing in the Animal Kingdom.
They can hear a mouse rustling in the grass from a great distance away.

We had hummingbirds being raised in our backyard, when the parents were gone from the nest for a little while, the babies would get out on the limbs and jump around, as soon as they knew their parents were coming back, they hurried to get back in the nest. I wander if this will happen soon to the owlets.

Hi Pat. We're getting to be regulars together at this hour!

I think it's glitch in the system. Like how sometimes it shows the viewer count (currently at 1392 viewers, in case you can't see it), and sometimes it doesn't. For instance, I have 2 screens open now (one to view the owl box and one to read the posts), and one shows the viewer count and the other says "On Air." I don't know what causes this.

I was looking back at the photos on Molly's blog, and this one caught my eye. Looks like he's giving Molly instructions:
"While you're out, Mom, we need you to get us each a mouse, a gopher, and some rodent surprise. Leave the tails on so Wes can play with them tomorrow."

I was only going to stay here for a brief visit but I've gotten a drink for a little girl, listened to spooky creaks in my old house, had a snack of Trader Joe's Turkey Jerky (great stuff) which the cat tried to steal from me and now the water softener has finished its cycle. All is quiet now so I think I'll head back to dreamland.

At the risk of really making someone mad, I'm reposting something I just wrote below in response to Latrippi so I can warm the good posters here:

"Well, Homeschool Famly/Famley has a FB page. Surely you have been here for those posts. And today I called out another FB poster named Naji Wench who laughed it off, but she really does give me strong troll vibes. It doesn't help that her pic is of a star with a circle around.

Definitely makes me think she's up to no good! Just beware of Nils/Jim/selde (all the same person) and someone else named Shannon. Possibly GS, but I'm still not sure about that person."

Socially dimensions....

POP SONG!

I noticed a lot of things in the air. One trick I've used it to note if the UFO disappears behind the box or not. If it does, it's likely a bat. If it doesn't, it's likely a bug right in front of the camera. But I love bats. Have a whole slew of them the come out in the meadow before dark to clean up on the bugs, which do irritate me.

If you have a chance. Go to a life & science museum near you. Many have bats and some even have talks/demos where you can see them up close. Many bats are very soft and delicate to the touch. Much less scary than any bio-lab sample. Seriously.

Today I learned there are a lot of trolls who actually visit frequently and have built up quite a chat history. In that chat history, several different names were used to portray different personalities, like the trouble maker, the political ranter, the complimenter, the insulter, the questioner. Somebody has been having a really good time coming on here and toying with all of us. And the funny thing is, one of their favorite things to say is that we need to "get a life." Ironic, isn't it. Also, there are other regular posters whom I mightily suspect of being trolls. Slowly but surely, I am learning to ignore any comments made by them.

I posted as a guest the first couple times. I think people who are really interested in wildlife will eventually post through a less anonymous means.

trolls, almost by definition, are a bit harder to spot than spammers (posting links to suspicious websites or inciting panic like the children have done) as they are seeking attention or a more subtle kind of solicitation.

Those looking for updates after being gone for a while might want to start here: <http://mollysbox.wordpress.com/blog/>

Great photos that will give you some perspective. Then come back and maybe a few of us can fill you in. I just took a break and many are following up on previous posts below - also a great place to read what's been happening.

What is that part added to the front of the nest, under the door?

A new perch for the soon to be fledging owlets to land on.

Good Morning Merritt.

I don't think I have any poetry to share right now 😊 but it looks like there was a lot of good work tonight.

I may have my kids write some poetry today for their school work. A couple of them like to watch the owls with me. We saw our first wild bald eagle yesterday too and the little one (Cindy-Lou) was sing-singing in the car, "We saw a bald eagle, we saw a bald eagle" very cute.

I know what you mean. I'm often so wound up it's hard to get to sleep. Wonder if after this is all over, if we might need a sound machine with owls squawking to be able to fall asleep.

Go ahead, laugh. I'm house sitting this week, and therefore I only have my laptop with me. For almost a month I've slept with the subtle sound of owlets singing in the night slipping softly from the speakers of my bedroom PC. It was incredibly difficult to sleep last night with the still air of silence. 😊

It's so amazing to see the owlettes eyes blinking. They look so owlsh. 😊 You can see them hissing. That was a fast delivery by Magee, no doubt.

Since I've been gone awhile could someone catch me up on our dear Owl Family? ...Whatever happened to the unhatched egg? Are all the owlets doing well? ...I can't wait to see the "kids" tomorrow during the daylight hours!!!

The egg is still there. Probably covered with pellets and animal remains that they didn't eat. Molly doesn't sleep in the box anymore.

She hunts for food with McGee. All the owlets are doing great.

not sure guarding is the proper term... maybe hogging would be more appropriate. 😊
