A quick Hello to Merritt to save the morning/night issue 😊

Any chance of a quick resume of the last 4 or 5 hours?

From the Barn Owl Trust: "Hungry nestlings will often stand right on the edge of the nest ledge (or cavity) waiting for a prey delivery and if the whole brood are hungry the volume of their excited calls can be tremendous! Some surprising behaviour has been recorded including nestlings repeatedly feeding each other - passing on food items brought in by the adults rather than eating it themselves!"

<http://www.barnowltrust.org.uk/infopage.html?id=76>

Sure looks alarming but apparently, it's just what they do. It also says that sadly some do fall out. Well, Carlos has a trampoline launch pad at the ready....

I just got back from watching the video. Awesome! Really. Sorry if I muddled up your debate! (I don't understand why you're debating the meaning of the term "fledge," really.) But I see your point now, Merritt. She does seem mostly to be trying to keep the critter out of the beak of the owlet biting at it. But I wonder if it isn't just that the darn thing is so heavy it would pull the little guy out of the nest if s/he tried to take it from her? (Also, it looks quite dead to me, though it's blurry and who can tell.) Maybe it's too heavy to fling or pass off so she has to take it in inside? She sat on the launch pad with it for a long time before flying up to the perch, maybe resting up for taking it in. I know that owls can carry things much heavier than themselves but that thing is big.

Check out the final exchange in the debate! I don't think James is going to see my last reply as he says he has bowed out, but I do want you to see it. Also, Cindy up above wants to know where the video is. I don't know. Can you tell her?

Yep, I see it. But what the heck are you debating at this point? I thought the question was, "What was Molly up to with the Big Thing," but now you're debating the meaning of fledge and whether or not walking on the ledge constitutes fledging. I don't get it. O_o

Today, 00:47:24 - Like - Reply - Delete

We're debating whether she was trying to tempt an owlet outside the box or not. I say no, they're not ready. James says yes, they are.

Today, 00:49:04 - Flag - Like - Reply

Latrippi

Ohhhh, whether they're ready ... and hence, whether they are fledging! Haha! OK. Well, gosh. Fledging is a process, isn't it? Anyway, my read of the video is that the rat was just too heavy to pass off to the owlets. Like tossing a dressed turkey at toddler standing on a balcony: "Here, kid catch this for dinner!" Oops! Little whozits would fall right on its head.

Merritt, your post here at 3:49:24 is WRONG. Please stop putting words into my mouth. I never said that. Your interpretation of my writing is flawed. Maybe it's my fault, but I think it may be due to some speed reading. Just a hint, slow down and read what was actually written.

fledge Pronunciation: \ˈflej\ Function: verb Etymology: fledge capable of flying, from Middle English flegge, from Old English -flycge; akin to Old High German flucki capable of flying, Old English flēogan to fly —

of a young bird : to acquire the feathers necessary for flight or independent activity; also : to leave the nest after acquiring such feathers transitive verb 1 : to rear until ready for flight or independent activity

2 : to cover with or as if with feathers or down

3 : to furnish (as an arrow) with feathers

which tempted them. I still don't believe she was tempting them outside. That would be awfully premature. Max is not old enough to fledge yet, much less the others. I'm willing to give on why she insisted on taking the rat inside, but not on tempting them out!

Well, it's true that she fed Wesley -- I have some great screen grabs of that! But why would she want to be sure a specific owlet got it? Killing it off makes more sense. It's a simpler explanation, right?

 lol, back off the afterburners a little. No one said she was attempting to get the owlets to fly. It's natural for all of these steps towards independence to happen gradually. She may not have been trying to get owlets lined up on the porch, but she clearly sat there for a while with no intentions of handing over her rat. I'd say that was pretty darn tempting, if you're an owl. 😊

Maybe I don't have a good understanding of what fledging is. I thought fledging includes leaving the nest for the first time. Once one steps out onto the porch, he will have begun to fledge. No?
Yesterday, 23:40:20 - Flag - Like - Reply

 James Hill
No. Not in the least. <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Fledge>

In this instance, a bird venturing out onto the "porch" would be nothing more than simply walking around the nest. Many birds walk around their nest long before fledging. Watch the eagles. It's just that this nest box is made differently from many other boxes. I'm sure owlets in trees, like the videos from the other night, venture out of the nest proper from time to time. The falling owl syndrome people have apparently changed the meaning of fledging around here, to mixed reviews.

Well, here's my rebuttal website for you. They even address the fallen birdie syndrome. According to Cornell, fledging does start when a bird leaves the nest, which I interpret to mean steps out on the porch.

I'll accept your rebuttal when you show me a study done on another owl box that has a porch! 😊

Most of the literature written on this is talking about nest boxes with NO front porch. They have no choice but to fly or fall when they "leave" those boxes. Our owls are living in a high-rise condo in San Marcos, complete with terrace. 😊

 Merritt
From Latrippi's website: "In this later half of the nestling period (when the owlets are 5–8 weeks old, usually in June–July), it is not uncommon for individual nestlings to accidentally fall from the nest. Sadly, this is often fatal even if they are uninjured. If there are still other young in the nest, individuals on the ground below are usually ignored and starve to death. Interestingly though, if the nest collapses and the entire brood fall to the floor, the adults will generally continue feeding them in their new position. In a deep and spacious nest cavity these accidental deaths are most unlikely to occur." If enticed out of the nest now, the owl could die.

Although I see what you're saying about the porch, one would think stepping out of the nest onto a tree branch would be about the same. So, let's just wait and see. If they start playing on the porch before day 50, I will eat the crow that has been bothering the box. 😊

But (I cannot resist a debate like this) James, your link says: "Fledge is the stage in a young bird's life when the feathers and wing muscles are sufficiently developed for flight. ... Birds are sometimes considered fledged once they leave the nest, even if they still cannot fly." I don't see how it supports what you're arguing.

My most recent argument is that simply walking around on the the outside of the box/nest is not fledging. Full stop.

If that's not clear enough, then I need to go to bed.

No need for me to continue here as the discussion has been muddled by too many misunderstanding and misquotes. Trying to clarify those will take another couple hours. I think people are reading what they think and not what's written. [cross-eyed smiley dude goes here]

As large as that was, I don't believe there was any concern over who got it. It wasn't something that could be consumed by one alone, not whole. I believe she just didn't want to let go of it for some reason. I doubt she even has interest/knowledge of who is getting what at this point. That would require much more forethought than is probably possible.

I do believe that, Merritt. But, I think those days of "mothering" are behind us. It serves no purpose anymore. The owlets are left to fend for themselves all day and night with whatever food is brought in from the night's hunt. It is now a matter of survival of the fittest, which it wasn't while she was still tending to their every need. Animals don't think and rationalize like that. Of course I'm just going on what I've been observing and what I've read, but I think a lot of the "parenting" thoughts here are just humans projecting human behavior.

I noticed Sunday night, I think that Molly sat on the perch a while with a mouse in her mouth. The owlets would try to reach out and take it from her and she would turn her head, not letting them take it. After she gave them the mouse, she sat a while and there were 2 owls at the door. She kept looking down on the porch like she was trying to get them to come out. I told my husband about it the next day and he laughed at me. She was as lovely as a girl owl could be

She cared for her brood
No matter her mood
So that all of her owlets could be...

Stealth hunters, great flyers, and soaring ghosts of the night
Be brave my young fledglings, as you take your first flight....

No kids...yet. 😊

But, I do have four cats and write poems about them...stories, and the like (even ones from their perspective) for my Christmas letter each year...and have been told by many that I should try and publish some of them as children's books. My sister is an artist (drawing, painting...) and could illustrate. But I would have NO idea how to go about doing that.

Would be fun though...and something I have given much thought. I DO love to write...and rhyming seems to be my thing...

Thank you 😊

Regardless of overlap, if they fill holes then why not? You may have better files than are there now. If we get redundancy we can always delete the lesser items.

I noticed some comments about the "likes" being difficult and I had found that too. But I also noticed James's comment about moving the cursor out of the white area to facilitate posting and I found it helped with the "liking" as well. So my suggestion is after you click on like, move your cursor to the orange area on the side. It seems to post the "like" faster that way. I hope it continues to work anyway. 😊

One of the easiest (yet most ignored) ways is simply to tell them to click the "Click Here" link, right above the video. 😊
(or even to click the video itself)

But after days and days of attempting that strategy, I resorted to saving all the links as bookmarks. It's less time consuming just to drag a link from there.

But we are working on filling the wiki with every link we can find. It will become a great default link when it's a little more polished: <http://mollyowl.pbworks.com/>

My Haiku to You

My 12 year old son wanted me to leave it as:

When I see the sky,
I can't wait to fly so high.
Keep growing, my wings!

He's doing poetry (including Haiku) at school right now. I wish he would show more interest in his own work. He's a lefty/creative type and I thought he would enjoy poetry more. Loves to draw/sketch and does great stuff...if I do say so myself. 😊 I have had him reading several poems from all of you. I think the timing has been perfect and I hope you've all inspired him.

I thought he couldn't reach far enough to screw in both sides, and didn't want to disturb the owls by moving the ladder and messing with it, but he knew this before he went up there and tested the contraption to make sure it could take owl action like a tree limb. But now it looks like something has been done to that far side.

This reminds me. I have four girls. Sometimes I go to the bathroom, lock the door, take a deep breath and relax. Only to pee. Probably more than you need to know. However, we all do it. And I will see there until a kid come to the door and need something completely unimportant or necessary. These guys at the door remind me of that. Even the dog meets me at the door or is in there. You can not do anything without being bothered.

Last weekend, our family saw a barn owl at a birds of prey show. We were surprised at how quiet the hissing/screeching sound was.

Also, for those of you with younger children, there's a wonderful book my children loved when they were small. Owl Babies by Martin Waddell. Simple but touching storyline and super illustrations. Speaking of books, don't forget to order your copy of Molly the Owl. We're ordering two, one for ourselves and one for the local library.

OB1 (main video) looks like it would be make for a thrilling nite at the drive-in!

Imagine sitting all tensed up in a car with a couple hundred unsuspecting others all around.

Anticipation, eerie sounds, spooky imagery, and all of a sudden...

SCREEEECH, SQUAWK, SCREEEECH!!!!
