For the people worried about no feed for the baby, here's a report of Cheryl's earlier post about hatchlings not needing food right away.
Just in case McGee doesn't turn up tonight though it was worth posting this bit of information from 'Understanding Owls' by Jerimma Parry Jones

All young owls are hatched with a yolk sac and that will last them at least 24 hours. Infact she says that they should not be fed for the first 12 to 24 hours as it can cause more harm than good - obviously this is from the point of view of incubator bred owls but the theory is exactly the same. Also she said that she had a wild baby Little Owl bought into her which had been hatched for 3 days and had no food but it was absolutely fine. Obviously if McGee does turn up and Molly then feeds the baby that's good as she knows what she is doing - but if he doesn't turn up - its absolutely not a problem!

Thanks for the updates. Eat for the exciting time in the owl box. Love the photo James posted. Don't understand why no food but know with chickens and other birds they don't need to eat for the first 24 hours so I hope it is the same with owls.
Dawn is rising so there probably won't be any food deliveries until tonight.
Speaking of food I had better feed my critters here so I can get back to watching Molly and Ashley.

The males really are sweeter, aren't they. Although I have two males who bite like females. I used to have canaries, and when it was fly time for the lovebirds, they would all hang at the canary cage. It got to the point that we called it Club Canary. But now all I have besides the peaches is one lone zebra finch who is getting up there in years. My cousin bred Greys for several years but they just don't appeal to me as much as other parrots. Except for Alex, of course, rest his soul.

She changed her tune after he left and I didn't hear her call for food any more after that. But I wasn't here all night, even if I did have the video on all night. Maybe she won't calling for food and was just discussing the plans for the weekend, telling him to rest. He will be pretty busy from this point forward.

Try SHIFT+PRT SCR. You know you aren't printing it directly to the printer, right? You use print screen, then have to paste that into a document like Word. Then you can save the image as a picture file or print it from the document.

OH, CHERYL...I'VE GOT ONE!!! Thank you, Thank you, Thank you!!!!

I have never opened paint before for anything...this is great Owls...

Keep forgetting to share a small piece of software from MS which is a stand alone...MS OneNote...bigger than paste it notes...easier to use than word, etc...love how it instantly saves...haven't worked with it a lot but is great..
got is on Ebay for $25.00

No, not dumb. Only some keyboards have F-Lock keys. Mine does. It will say F Lock on it if you have one. It is used on keyboards that have many multifunction keys, so you do not have to press the function key every time. It was just a guess.

Greetings and Happy Birthday to our little Ashley. I hung in there until after midnight last night, but was becoming a bobble head. I had dreams about nests and birds and things all night.
I have only been down a few steps in the basement. Anxious to hear if food was brought in.. How much McGee stuck around...
And any other tidbits... 😊

Just in case McGee doesn't turn up tonight though it was worth posting this bit of information from 'Understanding Owls' by Jemima Parry Jones

All young owls are hatched with a yolk sac and that will last them at least 24 hours. Infact she says that they should not be fed for the first 12 to 24 hours as it can cause more harm than good - obviously this is from the point of view of incubator bred owls but the theory is exactly the same. Also she said that she had a wild baby Little Owl bought into her which had been hatched for 3 days and had no food but it was absolutely fine. Obviously if McGee does turn up and Molly then feeds the baby thats good as she knows what she is doing - but if he doesn't turn up - its absolutely not a problem!

Yes it is the one Trystan recommended - theres some really good information in it - Its written from a view point of Keeping Owls - which isn't something I'd ever intend to do - but I'd love to work with them at some point and there is some really good stuff on their anatomy and everything generally - I read it ages ago and it sits by me when I'm on my PC so I can refer to it from time to time!! The author is very well respected in the world of Owls - its a very good read!

 I've read a really good book called Understand Owls by Jemima Parry Jones, its more about raising and breeding Owls from either a conservation point of view or if you wanted to fly them or whatever but there is some really good, useful information in it. Incubator bred Owlets are not fed for between 12 and 24 hours after first hatching - I'm assuming its the same for Little Ashley as the only difference is she's been sat under her mum instead of a warm box for 30 odd days!! I think the nutrients they have been getting whilst inside the egg keeps them going for a while!

More about egg hatching.
The owlet starts pipping the egg. There should be a small section of the egg where the owlet has tried to chip its way out. Pipping can take a lot out of an owlet and it's not unusual for an owlet to take a break. It can take as long as 24 hours from pipping to hatching, so don't fret until a significant amount of time has passed (at least 10-12 hours).

Actually Burnee, I'm pretty sure Carlos has to flip a switch, so to speak, to make the music play. The cam was down for a moment just now because he's up resetting the recording. He said something earlier about how it only records for so long, and that he he would have to come on later to make it record again so he'd be sure to get the hatching on video.

More about hatching eggs that I did not know. This is from the Internet.
The shell of an incubating egg has 3 layers. The outer shell (what we normally think of as the shell), an inner membrane of rubbery material (if you've peeled a hard boiled egg, you've probably noticed this membrane), and a last inner layer which carries the chicks blood supply. When a chick begins chipping its way around the egg from the inside, it punctures these inner membranes (and hopefully the outer shell). When the innermost layer is punctured, it tells the chick's body to reduce the blood circulation in the membrane.

It's Saturday, a day off, but I'm leaving for the USA on Tuesday, so I've got to go into work to finish up before I fly away like McGee. Since family and friends expect us to be social, my time here will be limited -- but my heart will be with owl-a-youse. Keep writing those gorgeous haikus. And like McGee, I'll be back with treats.

According to Internet sources, the chick punctures a hole through the egg's inner membrane and into the air cavity within the egg and starts breathing on its own before the egg gets cracked.

Hi Dianne. Now that there a pipping hole and maybe even the beginnings of a crack, air can get inside. I don't know if that has anything to do with them being able to peep in the egg, but I think the egg is no longer airtight at this point.

Linda we do not know the circumstances in which this bird was kept. It very well may have been a rescue and could not be released. Certainly after being raised as it was it surely would not have survived in the wild. And tethers are used by all bird handlers, it isn't inhumane.

FYI - I spent much of the last hour or so updating some of the wiki pages for the second clutch. The sidebar now has Second Clutch info and some items on the Front Page have been changed to indicate that there is a second clutch. We are not planning to do a daily timeline like we did for the first clutch (that would one of you want to volunteer) but I have made a separate page for Second Clutch information and videos and have started collecting information there that would normally have been in the timeline for the first clutch.

There is lots more that could be done, but I don't think those of us who update the wiki have the energy to do as much as we did last time. Please check it out and feel free to let me know if you have suggestions, or if you see something that you think should be updated.
Feel free to keep adding poetry, Owlcronyms, and words to the lexicon. ANYONE can go to the site and read the content. Only if you want to make additions do you need to request or have "access". Please be sure to mention your chat name if you request access, or I will send an email back asking you for it. 😊

Well, I'm sneaking out, too. My 4 yr old announced at bedtime that he wants me up at 7am tomorrow. Someone forgot to inform him that he's not the boss of me (at least not until I'm old and can't choose my own nursing home), especially when Dad is home and up before 7 anyway. But regardless, I suspect I won't be "allowed" to sleep much later than that, so - like Molly - I probably should take advantage of the sleep time while I can. Hopefully I get to pop in from time to time tomorrow and AT LEAST see a baby arrive. Until then, sleep tight everyone and dream of hatching eggs in the morning. 😊

For those of wondering how much more beneficial a rabbit is than a mouse for Molly, here's information compiled by Carlos. Additional estimate courtesy James Hill and yours truly.

MOUSE UNIT EQUIVALENTS
1 mouse = 1 mouse unit (≈20g)
1 gopher = 10 mouse units
1 rat = 16 mouse units
1 rabbit or 1 possum = 24 mouse units
1 carlos = 3,000 mouse units
1 polar bear = 32,000 mouse units
1 cow = 36,250 mouse units
1 space shuttle orbiter (organic bits only) ≈ 1,000,000 mouse units

Owls search for food mostly by sound at night and not by sight. Hopefully they don't go for carion unless they are very, very hungry as most carion is found in the road where there is traffic which if often the biggest source of an owls untimely death.

Linda, Carlos set up his broadcast of his live cam through the other site (u stream). That's the service they sell, along with a streaming chat to go with the broadcast. This site, Sportsmans Paradise on Line, links to many different live wildlife cams around the world and provides a different type of chat experience. A wonderful chat experience! But for Carlos to even recognize this chat would be like the CEO of Bloomingdales doing his shopping at Macy's. His arrangement and relationship is with u stream. Hope that helps explain why he isn't here. We've encouraged it and even promised we would never tell Stream, but to the best of our knowledge he hasn't been here.

Average life span of a wild barn owl is 20.9 months. Average female has only 1 clutch in her life.

Anyone know how old an owl has to be to mate and lay eggs?

Life is hard in the wild for owls, but if they can survive their first 2 years the survival rate goes up. Apparently, experience counts out there in the real world. Rates of survival are also higher in warmer areas like San Marcos - harsh winters in the north are responsible for many owl deaths.

What is FUNNY ... we are discussing habits that happened the LAST time, after each of my CherUBs, each ONe was completely different, the first was the COMPLETE UNKNOWN, a unnecessary C-section, only afterwards I realized I had a Doctor who prefer to schedule births. The second was natural, thank goodness, encouraged by that group of Doctors and it was the biggest hormonal high I had ever been on, (It lasted for several weeks, I was SUPER WOMAN!) I had absolutely nadda pain killers, just remember all my LAMAZ classes and even the stuff I laughed about happen, so each birth, or not trying to humanize but what the hay, she knows NOW what to expect, just thought I would share ...

In my rendition, I had left out the part about how he stood around inside the box while they chatted for a while. That conversation between them occurred between the bonding and his rest out on the ledge. While he was lounging around out there, she called for food and then for more bonding.

I was speaking of after he went in the BOX and bonded, he actually hung out for about 8 minutes or a little more, while inside she would screech and he would answer with a screech, it went back and forth and then he went outside and sat and she kept on and finally chortled and he flew off after quiet a time also, I have not checked my timestamps on that though.

I honestly "think" that she is snuggled down on the eggs to continue to incubate the three that she needs to and to keep the one in the process of hatching warm. It's pretty chilly in San Marcos this time of night and the new one is born pretty naked and needs her body warmth.

Maybe we could convince Carlos to play reveille at the first signs of a hatch, then we could all dose off with the volume turned up. 😊

Oh there was bonding all right, and this time we had a really good tail swinging for a while. But then, McGee sat outside for a while and Molly squawked for a long time and then she twittered after a while. JL says McGee twittered back at her, but he never went inside. Then he just up and flew away and she has been quiet ever since.

Merritt he stood for quiet awhile in the box after bonding on two legs, then one leg, and she would screech and he would reply in a screech and it went on for quiet a while, I took many screen shots, i will go back and check the time, i have to separate and date everything, but i was doing the Oz thingy and trying to keep records on what was going on. I actually saw Max hatching i just did not observe what lead up to that ... hope this helps...

You can probably download a free extension for whatever browser you use that will let you do a split screen. Google Chrome and Firefox both have them. But you can also just open a second window. Do whatever you do to get an internet window a second time. Shrink both windows so they fit on your monitor screen. Be sure to mute all but one of the cam pictures or you'll get an echo when Carlos speaks.

OK, first of all, abandon Internet Explorer. You can download Google Chrome or Firefox in seconds and they are both free. I used Firefox for many years but I really like Chrome best. It's easy and fast. You won't lose IE so if you want you can always go back to it, but I don't think you'll want to. It won't hurt anything to give it a try.

I know it can be intimidating to change something to change something on a computer but using IE is like driving a 20 year old car when someone wants to give you a brand new one for free. Try it! It's fun and you have people here to help if you have questions. Lots of chat folks have made the change to these browsers.

There is a "peeping hole" in one of the eggs, which means that the egg has started to hatch. If you turn your sound up and listen for a while they may be able to hear the soft "peeping" of the owl that is close to hatching, FAU Owls.

Molly called repeatedly he'd hung around long enough, so she gave up on the food call and switched to the herring call. McGee responded to that for a while and decided he'd food around long enough, so he few off and she got quiet. Now she's thinking to herself: I'm about to hatch a baby there. Don't just sit around out there doing nothing. Feed me or bond me. One or the other body. If you're not doing that, you better leave. Come around here when I'm continued muttering to herself.

He stayed in the box for 6 minutes last night, Ruth. And he has been hanging around outside on the perch or fledge ledge for quite a while after the first visit since this clutch started. Someone reminded us the other night that there was no outside camera during the first clutch and we couldn't see where McGee went when he left the box.

Well, Barb, Lissanne explained to us not too long ago that owls copulate by cloacal apposition. What that means is this (and now these are my words, not Lissanne's): Owls don't have external sex organs. Instead their sex organs are internal. In order for those internal organs to meet, the act of copulation requires rotating the tails. No apposition: no copulation. What we just saw was copulation!

I just read that BasilMarceaux in TN lost the primary for the governor ticket with only .0486% of the vote. There's always next time to "clean house".

Dear Owlet,
Would you please give a good Herculean kick to the eggshell? I hear you peeping. I know you have some lungs. In fact, I do believe your peeping is getting louder. You are able to peep even when Mom is sitting on top of you. So really one good kick is all it will need. See I live on the East Coast, and it is getting late. Trust me, I need lots of beauty sleep. Now I have thought about moving to your time zone for this clutch, but securing housing and a job might be a problem... unless your mom will let me move in. I'll catch rats. Please little owlet. Use your energy. Don't mean to mess with nature, but I need to go to bed soon. Thank you for your consideration.
