Natalie Jan, re: your post below about Cat Stevens. I had to visit my cardiologist yesterday, who is the absolutely handsomest guy I've ever seen! (Plus, he's really nice and down to earth.) I had a whole list of questions for him, but when he walked into the room...well...I forgot everything I wanted to talk to him about! And I loved his songs so much! He was (and is) a real sweetheart. I watched a few videos that he made about 4 or 5 years ago (Peace Train was one of them) and his voice is still wonderful - he just can't make those higher notes any more. Lynda C Whew! I've been away for the last 5 hours. I ran down the stairs to the basement - wasn't too bad. The climb back up was an arduous one - had to make a few stops at the various landings to give my poor back and hip some rest. Also had to take a few other stops to see some great photos and save some links. When the beginnings of a huge headache developed, I stopped to refresh myself several more times with a few chuckles. Lynda, it is a rustic bread recipe that does not require kneading. Breads that I have to knead fail miserably. But this is so good! Plus it makes a lot of dough & you can keep it in the fridge & tear off a chunk when you want fresh hot bread for dinner. Oh yum...too bad what we are having tonite doesn't go with fresh hot bread!

WARNING! SLEEP TALKING HUBBY STORY AHEAD!
For those who were not here last night - Colleen was trying to stay awake to see McGee make a delivery, and so I posted a video of some pretty wild cat clips... Hubby was not (mostly) dreaming at the time. But he sleepily turned over toward me and said:

"How many cats do we have?" (need I say that we have no cats???)

Later, he (sorta) woke up to use the restroom (sorry if that's TMI). Got back into bed, laid down, sat back up and said:

"Do we have a cat named Molly?"

Gotta love him!

Car, I had a very small shallot that started to sprout in my kitchen. So I planted it in a pot out on my fire escape and now it's as big as a bermuda onion! Just wondered if they tasted different if they got that big. Guess I'll find out soon!

Kathryn R I think Windows 7 comes with a tool called Snagit or Snipit or something like that. Can someone with Windows 7 tell her how to find that program? Today, 17:29:40 - Flag - Like - Reply

Kathryn R I'm on Windows XP so I don't have that tool, I do it differently. Today, 17:30:08 - Flag - Like - Reply

Kathryn R In the meantime, you can just press the PmtScrn button on your keyboard, then open up the Paint program in your Accessories folder and paste it into that program. Then if you can crop it with Paint if you know how to do that or any other imaging program you might have. Today, 17:31:44 - Flag - Like - Reply sues78vw Done thank you all. Today, 17:44:59 - Flag - Like - Reply

JH (Owls are not People) I replied to you but I was a little late seeing your question. Windows ?? Use the snipping tool. You won't need anything else to prepare simple screenshots. It allows you to crop and save as jpg all in one pass. Very handy tool. Today, 17:32:27 - Like - Reply - Delete sues78vw Where do you find the snipping tool? Today, 17:33:55 - Flag - Like - Reply

JH (Owls are not People) Click the Orb in the lower left and just start typing snip. The tool will pop up in the list above as an option to click on. You can find any program and almost any file that way. Today, 17:37:03 - Like - Reply - Delete

Barb I couldn't believe your friend is having trouble selling sweet corn! If I lived closer I would have been happy to buy some from him. Hmm, I should take a drive out to "my" orchard and see if the fellow who sells off the back of his truck is at the auction barn. I usually buy 5-6 doz and freeze a lot of it. Barb That's odd, usually I get a better deal for sweet corn out in the country than I do in the city. It's only worthwhile if I buy a lot though because the place I go is just over 90 minutes round trip. I buy bushels in the spring for sauce and eventually freeze it for that. It was nice to see that. Where I used to live (a different suburb) there were a couple farmers who parked in the apples for sale and sold off their trucks. It was nice that they had a regular schedule. Barb In the city I find people who either don't care about fresh picked corn or really don't know there's a difference. I don't buy corn from my grocery and they get good produce. (ok, call me picky or snooty about my sweet corn) Today, 17:26:08 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by Lynda C

Rhonda Hargrove I miss fresh corn. When I was little, we lived on a dairy farm and we picked corn and cooked it the same day from the corn field next to our house. purdyfarmsBecky, WA When I had my garden, I would freeze my corn too. I would peel down the green and take off the silk. Saw the eye doc. He thinks my blurred vision was some kind of muscle spasm and I'll be fine. The med still has side-effects I have to be aware of (means reg tests and such) but, I'll be OK. It is helping the Psoriatic Arthritis (my hands are moving much better). 😊

No, it's hydroxychloroquine...it's actually a malaria drug. They discovered it helps with rheumatoid and psoriatic arthritis. There is a SMALL chance it can cause blindness...but, it happens slowly and as long as I have tests done regularly, we should see any danger signs early enough to reverse any damage to the optic nerve. Boy, that sounds scarier than it is. I'm doing fine, and really seeing good results already (after 5 weeks). I take a couple of other drugs too.

Hey Rhonda - I've been taking Hydro.. for my Lupus for a while, and it really does help. My eye doc says that the best way I can constantly monitor things for myself is to pick out something that is red, and look at it every morning at breakfast. If I notice any change in the way I perceive the color, I should call her right away. Otherwise, come in every 6 months.

And just for the record, someone here is misinterpreting my regret, but it's so irrelevant, isn't it? Enjoying Molly and our MOD friends is the focus, right? Hang in there, Rhonda! I hope you keep feeling good and the meds continue to work for you!

When we were suffering from empty box syndrome I heard a commotion in a tree in my yard one afternoon - 4 p.m. - so went back to look. A huge barred owl was sitting on a low branch, and we seemed equally shocked to see each other. He flew off, followed by a pack of a dozen or so birds, who were really angry with him. I guess they didn't want him in the area, although he lives in the neighborhood. I felt really guilty because I thought, boy, I hope he catches one of you and takes you back to his owlets or mate. I'm pretty sure it was a male, judging from coloring.

Vicki, 'mobbing' (as that is called) is a very common behavior of nearly all birds. Birds instinctively have 'templates' of predators in their brains, and will harass or 'mob' birds of prey to chase them out of their territories. Two examples are groups of sparrows mobbing crows, which often steal their young, and mixed groups of songbirds mobbing a hawk. I've also seen individual Kestrels (which are small birds of prey) harassing Red-tailed Hawks, and individual Peregrine Falcons harassing several different hawks. And Mockingbirds are famous for their brazen attacks on ANY type of bird of prey.

Jan I have watched mockingbirds chase huge cats around the yard. They will "attack" just about anything, they are fearless! I often tell my cat she better be glad she isn't guilty of messing with any of the birds...the mockingbird would "get" her! (she has a bell collar, hard to catch a bird with that and being 14 yrs old she is "slow")

Somebody down below asked where you can find Cedar Waxwings. So I dutifully went to whatbird, and it looks like you can find them all over the US at some time or another, but resident year round up north, east to west.

Blue Jays ARE bullies, and they won't think twice about eating other birds' eggs, too. However, wherever Blue Jays live, they serve as a universal alarm system for other species of birds in their territory. Even other wildlife, like small mammals, react to their loud alarms. They're especially good at warning other birds and mammals to the presence of predators like hawks and cats. So they DO have their good points!

They travel in flocks; and can be found together pigging out on berries when they ripen. I've read accounts of them getting a tad wasted on fermented berries!!

Blue Jays and Cardinals are in too much competition for the same food sources to ever be friends!! Blue Jay's main source of food in the woods are acorns, but in suburban settings they love sunflower seeds (among other seeds), which are the Cardinal's favorites.

The Blue jays certainly love the sunflower seeds. In fact they push out the other seeds to get to them. But no harm done, the Morning doves love to get the seeds on the ground. You are a wealth of good info!!!! 😊

Hi all, just back from town and had to check in here to see sweet Molly. Was a little surprised to see there had been some controversy and CAR was upset. Don't these people know you don't mess with our dear Car or any of the other regulars here? How long does it take them to get that figured out?
I went down to the basement to what all this was about and can only applaud Car for the way she handles these intruders. We keep this a happy site and if someone wants to make lousy comments maybe they need to go else where.
That's my opinion and I'm sticking with it.

Hi wildlife lover! I lurk mostly but make a comment now and again. Everyone is welcome to join in the lively and often funny chat! It's just that some people prefer to "mix it up"--that's not why we are here--we are here to watch Nature in the beautiful life of Molly the Owl, McGee, her owlets (1st clutch) and now four more eggs. I learn something every day, too, because there are an awful lot of very intelligent chatters who are helpful and patient if you need help with anything!

No one is considered an intruder just for being new. There are those who excel at disagreement and have a goal of stirring controversy and there are those here who have genuinely different interpretations of what goes on with Molly et al but are willing to "agree to disagree". The former are not usually appreciated.

Hi Cheryl, I just posted above that I can see my history. I haven't deleted it. Strange things happen with stuff appearing and disappearing and I have no idea what makes it happen. I jump in on this particular controversy, because the fact that it is still an issue, still fuel for unkindness, still ego-food for those needing a boost, makes me angry. I don't understand keeping it alive and asked for it to be dropped.

Why reference it at this late date? It's just stale.

Hi YTQ, I don't feel at all defensive. I tune in because A) it's a public site, and B) it's a public site. Sometimes there's some genuine funny stuff going on. Then someone crashes it with an old, stale, unkind reference. This time I responded, hoping to bring it to an end.

Today, 16:02:10 - Flag - Like - Reply

YTQ

IMO, all it will do is cause friction and unpleasantness. None of us need it in our lives. Everyone on this chat loves owls. We all want the best for owls everywhere. We especially love Molly and McGee. And if I remember right, it wasn't this group that started the verbal warfare to begin with. It was another group that thought Carlos didn't know what he was doing, and what he was doing, was all wrong. Everything was taken care of, and the owlettes pledged, right on time, with no mishaps. I think those ugly remarks from that initial beginning still sting some people.

But in the interest of peace and harmony, wouldn't it be better to stay silent and not cause an uproar that there really are no answers for?

Today, 16:20:51 - Flag - Like - Reply
Liked by purdyfarmsBecky, WA Cheryl Owen

Cheyenne

Well, YTQ, I had nothing to do with the initial onslaught. Missed it entirely. But what I did observe is that, despite what appears to be a heavy-handed, possibly hysterical approach, additions were made and they did in fact make all the difference and everything turned out well. I mean, by his own admission, Carlos said he didn't know anything about owls...it wasn't what anyone "thought", it was fact.

This is intense, but I think it's good that at least it's getting talked about, and if I have to be the lightning rod, fine.

What started this current incident that has everyone so up in arms, is that I responded to an wildly inappropriate remark from Car who was feeding off of some previous posts. She thought better of it, and deleted, but too late.

Cheyenne, I do agree with you and I did cringe when I saw that particular comment as I knew what was going to happen - but at the same time it did make me chuckle as its become part of the 'history' of this story! There isn't a single person on here who doesn't agree with what you are trying to achieve in terms of caring for the Barn Owls but I think parts of the way you and others went about it were more controversial than helpful (part two to follow running out of characters!)

just popping in for my Molly fix!!!! I just can't get enough of this gorgeous girl!! While the cameras were off after the Owlets fledged I checked out other owl cameras, but nothing, and I mean absolutely none of them, compared to what Carlos provides to us. Good resolution, excellent view, and even a nightvision camera. I'm so happy that he has decided to keep the cameras up and running so that we can see our favourite owl family!!!

My mountain ash berries are not even ripe yet, CAR. I don't usually see the cedar waxwings then, but the robins devour the berries quickly. One year several of the mountain ash berries were still on the tree in February and we had robins come then - unusual to see robins in Maine then. I also had a lot of cedar waxwings when my snowball bush was in blossom.

And Cheryl, there are some literary conventions with haiku that we would follow if we wanted to be formal about it, but since the beginning I've always thought our haikus should be written just for fun. As far as I'm concerned, just focusing on the 5-7-5 syllabication and a Molly theme helps keep haiku fun for everyone.

I've heard this before, Adam, and I dispute the answer every time. It's a coffin, but the person who makes it is going to use one just like it some day, and the person who buys it might have bought it ahead of time for himself or herself. And as for not knowing that you're using it, my grandfather was a coffin salesman, and he and my grandmother stored their old National Geographics up in the attic in his coffin samples, so they knew they were using them!

I better take my gold pan then! I camped there once... it's freezing and I think that's where it got it's name. My Dad gold mined out of Alaska... the only panning I have done was out of the concentrate barrels... now that was fun!!!! You would get little flakes and some very small sorta nuggets and felt like you were hitting it big time. It was fun and about as addictve as watchin Moly!!!!

It is fun, and I miss the camping trips and panning! Maybe I should get my pan out of storage and go down to my creek and try it! Might help pay the mortgage with the price of gold what it is now!!

Lorrie: So sorry you were offended by the discussion of how much house is too much house. I think because many of us have stuck together here since the first owls fledged (and we have now been honored with the second clutch) that our discussions have gone into more...hmm...esoteric subjects that have been of interest to some and still are. I think there is room in this "house" for almost everyone and many opinions and topics of discussion. The BOT owl site shows us that some owl houses are just not appropriate. Some people and animals have more house than they need; some have less. Finding what's right is what matters. Hope you will understand. There will always be someone here to talk owl talk (Molly rules this crib), but don't be easily offended by other topics. That can be perceived as rude too.

Yeah thanks. He had bone spurs, lots of damage to the rotator and various other things but they put a catheter in the shoulder to keep the whole arm and shoulder numb so he doesn't feel a thing. Not even his arm, hand or shoulder. He will keep it in for three days at which time I will remove it and he will get feeling back. I had the same surgery three years ago and they didn't numb it. I don't do drugs well so I didn't take pain killers but believe I wished they had numbed it. I think. He says it's creepy.

Hi Sue. I just read your question about screen shots. If you are using Windows Vista or 7, I recommend the Snipping Tool, like Cheryl said. A quick Google search on that will turn up many tutorials, but it is very easy to use. Of course there are many ways to do it and many cheap or free utilities that automate the process using the Printscreen key. I use a stand alone program called Snagit, with all kinds of bells and whistles, but it's not free.

hi, monsoon season has started in the high desert. that means more than 2 minutes of sustained rain. i don't remember the last time it rained. maybe i was too immersed in molly? jan, i am not an herbalist, but i like to interact with plants and learn how people have used them in the past and do use them now. so intriguing and so endless. when i read about your eyes, bilberry popped into my head. here's a bit on the plant if it interests you from michael tierra's "the way of herbs," one of my favorite herb books:

They can have as many as three broods a year, if the climate and food is good. Molly has four eggs, with the hatch dates in the same place as last time, above the picture.

I hope we can keep this site conflict free. A good way to begin is to stay about from politics, religion and topics that have nothing to do with Molly and Mc Gee. I have always been a green thinker and love nature. I do have opinions similar to others on this site; however, I think it best to find a better forum to voice those opinions.

☺☺☺ Are you referring to something specific that you're seeing now, Lorrie? This site has always been remarkably free of conflict, with the exception of a very few times, and they were always resolved quickly... We do, at times, get off topic, but it almost always of a personal nature, because we've all come to be friends here. Please do let us know if there is something specific that is of concern to you. I think everyone here wants the very best M&M experience possible!

I was referring to the feed about large homes (McMansions). I couldn't write all that I wanted to in one post so it is written above in the second post. Like you say people get off topic because of friendships but there are some of us who seldom post a comment but have watched since the beginning. This is a thought that can offend many. As I said I am a green thinker. I may agree with all of you but I feel if we keep this free of this kind of discussions from the start it will go better.

Lorrie - I am happy that you are now posting - and I don't speak for this site, but I do hope that you will always feel free to post. You sound like a person who cares much about the owls and the environment. I think we all share that here. I will say that I think this is the kindest, most open and least contentious on-line site I have ever been privileged to be part of. I hope you will continue to join us in this amazing experience with an open mind, and we will get to know you in the same way!

I'm not sure where you are coming from, Lorrie. For the most part, the discussion on this site have always stayed away from religion and politics. I agree with CAR, it has also been remarkably free of conflict. There may be differences of opinion on some matters, but those differences of opinion are generally respected, unless it appears a person comes to the chat room specifically to cause trouble. Yes, there are and have been discussions that are not specific to owls. Sometimes they are personal in nature, people sharing their everyday lives, photos, etc. Often, too, they revolve around other nature topics. I see no problem with that. A very large circle of people have come together here, not only for the owls, but in friendship. I'm truly sorry if you feel that the "conflict" you mention seems to be here.

 CAR

Pursja - you have GOT to slow down! You're gonna wear yourself out like this, my friend! Yes, the rich food will give you some problems - try taking over-the-counter Famotidine instead of the prilosec (and the generic or drugstore brand is fine) Take a double dose, early in the morning and then again at night for a few days and see if that doesn't help... (brought to you by my Doc's at the Mayo clinic. It's worked for me, and some days I thought nothing would help)

 CAR

Then, at least THINK about taking a half day off and relaxing, will you? Please?????

Sweet CAR...puttering about outside is my therapy! I can listen to the wind in the trees, the birds singing, the deer come to visit...it is so good for my soul. I rarely have to take something for my tummy, fortunately. & the past 2 nights were not my own cooking. Plus I haven't been able to spend much of the past 2 years at home since work tends to interfere. So, although it sounds exhausting (& it is physically), it is so good for my spirit & psyche.

Thank you so much for your concern. You truly are a wonderful person ☺️☺️

Kristi from VA - If you're still here - I read the "Research and Development" info about the Barn Owl Trust nest boxes. Their stats seem good for this type of box, but somewhat vague in explanation as to the present situation. The reason these owls are getting out certainly doesn't seem like a large buildup of what they call "Jackdaw" nest material. What do you think??

Carlos is already up, played a few ads earlier. Both cameras are up and working fine here. It is likely a U stream issue if you don't have one or the other. They broadcast from many different servers across the country (globe) so one outage doesn't always affect everyone.

Good morning all, when I left last night McGee had come in for his bonding time but it appeared he didn't leave a treat then went out and sat guard on the ledge. Not having moderators this go around I was wondering who stayed late to see if any food was delivered. Hope we get to see Molly again later in the day.

Food was delivered and Molly carried one item out onto the ledge to eat part of it. She is finishing off a large rat right now. Been working at it for a while.

Good morning all. I promised myself I would not do this but here I am but just for a second I must go to the gym. James I just read back and saw your response to my post yesterday. Good to see you too. I like the idea of a treadmill I think that would be awesome. I have always wanted a bike hooked to my TV so I could watch and ride at the same time. But I have never figured out how to run the TV from the bike. I am told it is possible. Currently swimming for exercise so a trip to the gym is necessary.

I may join you for a while in the evenings but I cannot start watching in the am or I will never go swim or get anything else done. Take care all and have a great day.

Cornwall Owllet Update - Tiny owl fell out AGAIN last night. Read 2nd entry first. Hi Jan!

21st - 12.45pm - The youngest Owllet has been removed by the farmer. A member of the BOT conservation team are on their way to check it over.
21st - an owl has fallen from the nestbox again overnight and we are in communication with the farmer to get it put back asap! For those concerned about the nestbox design, please follow the link on the right entitled 'Research and development' and scroll down to the section entitled Fallen owl investigation and the development of safer Barn Owl nestbox designs.

... McMansions are the fad, people have been living in tiny houses since we moved out of caves. But in America we've gotten so accustomed to more MORE that we've forgotten that less is more sustainable, and simple living can be more rewarding. (emphasis mine)

I'm willing to bet that the average unused attic space of those McMansions exceeds the total square footage of even modest homes in most of the world.

There is a Mega McMansion across the street from the photo below. It was under construction in a "neighborhood" here in the triangle. The lots we were surveying held 4-7 thousand sqft "Tuscan Villas." The monster across the way was 17,000 square feet of heated space. Some 30-something software CEO with more cash than anything else and a penchant for flaunting it. Seemed appropriate for me to shoot the port-o-john instead, as we were in the worst part of the housing crash at the time. Foreclosure surveys were a hot item and we were visiting vacated and bank-owned small bungalows all too often. Most of them still had signs of former inhabitants scattered around.

Hi James, I totally agree. Who wants all that space to clean? Of course, we'd be foreclosed on by now if we had a McMansion so wouldn't have to worry about that. We are downsizing once again in August. Very small but easy to clean!

Hey James...Is it the "cookies" that keeps a chat history intact ??
Today, 09:37:35 - Flag - Like - Reply

JH (Owls are not People)
Yes, in a way. If you log on using different methods, i.e. js-kit, Facebook, etc. then you will end up with broken histories in all those places, and a separate cookie for each. If you only ever log on with one method, like I did with Facebook at the very beginning, then you should be able to keep your history across multiple PCs and cookies.

If you don't log in at all, then your history is only as long as the session on that cookie.

I have to admit that I'm a cake, cookie, sweet freak. I would rather have a sweet than eat regular food, but I have a passion for baking and do it quite frequently. I have no one here to eat all the stuff I make, DH would rather have store bought cake like Entenmann's, so I find people to give it to. I bring desert over to the farm people (owners and workers) every Sunday, I bring treats to the library and to the pharmacy. There is always someone who appreciates home made. At the holiday time I bake about 130 lbs. of cookies, pack them up in 2 lb. packages and give them as gifts and send some to all the family across the states.

Nit-pick taken. In the limited sense of the word, "we" on SPO do not have official moderators nor have "we" had them before (this site does have a few zealous unofficial types who selectively criticize specific individuals). It is my understanding that there are no moderators left on the other site so in the broadest sense of the word, "we" do not have any moderators. Unless the situation changes, it is unlikely there will be a "treat" count.

Hi Mollie! It's getting better. Some days it's felt downright normal. The doc doesn't think I actually scratched it this time, she thinks its dry eye syndrome, either brought on from actually scratching it the end of May or by allergies. Just using lots of drops, and I go back to see her tomorrow. Thanks for asking!

Ouch, dry eye is bad, too. My team leader at work has it. She keeps horses, and they think maybe the whole thing started when she absentmindedly rubbed a speck of dust in her eye. I hope you continue to improve. Eyes are something that you just can't mess with. Use those drops, sweetie!

That's good to hear, Cinda! When I was wearing contacts years ago, my eyes would get so dry that the contacts would stick to them and I had to get them removed by the eye doctor! Yeeeks, just remembering it gives me the willies!

Today, 07:51:28 – Flag – Like – Reply

Yikes! I had trouble with scratching my eyes from staying up too late with my contacts in, but never to that extent! You do like to do things wholeheartedly, don't you Jan!

Today, 07:52:55 – Flag – Like – Reply

Cinda Browne

That's kind of what started the whole thing - contacts were very dry and I had a tear in my index finger that I didn't notice. I will certainly be more careful now, if I can ever get back into contacts. She also switched me to the bifocals ones, which are thicker and dry the eyes out even more.

Today, 07:57:02 – Flag – Like – Reply

Mollie

Lots more drops! I couldn't adapt to the bifocals or that one-eye-two-eye thing, so I just had the Lask surgery. Take care of yourself, Cinda, and keep those eyes hydrated.

I would love to have Lask surgery! I've been near-sighted (badly!) since I was 6 or 7. It's hard to imagine what it would be like to open my eyes in the morning and see clearly. I just hydrated, now have got to get ready for work.

I posted this earlier but the SPAMbot ate it.
Amazing. I never heard of the following before.

"A light or glow in the sky sometimes heralds a big earthquake. On 17 January 1995, for example, there were 23 reported sightings in Kobe, Japan, of a white, blue, or orange light extending some 200 meters in the air and spreading 1 to 8 kilometers across the ground. Hours later a 6.9-magnitude earthquake killed more than 5500 people. Sky watchers and geologists have documented similar lights before earthquakes elsewhere in Japan since the 1960s and in Canada in 1988."

Have any of the California MODs ever seen such a thing?

 woke up nauseated. Maybe too much rich food for dinner. Took a probsec & cleaned the kitchen. Had left it a mess & now when I get up for real, it will be clean. So I know Molly & McGee would be up, but you folks are early risers also...or just never went to bed 😊

Oh, Good morning Lucky! A Tins' I reply!

 Starting to feel better, but take it easy, what's that. When I go back to work, that's the time to take it easy. Now it is time to get projects done, catch up time since I haven't had much down time in a couple of years.

Kathryn~ I read that you internet isn't unlimited. I didn't know any of them were limited. That sucks.... Are there certain hours that are unlimited or are all hours the same?

I get 100 G of "usage" a month. Every web page, every email, every live "streaming" event takes ups usage. It's not limited to hours at all. I could upgrade for about 30 dollars more a month for 2 gig usage, but we don't have the money to do that. Now I know how to "monitor" my usage so can just limit myself... 😊

I just screencapped our last month's usage. After the bill I totally stopped hardly doing anything, but we were billed $1.50 per MB over 100 gig. As you can see, we went way over last month, and it was almost $50! But as you can see, tomorrow is my last day in the billing cycle so I am streaming like a mad woman, LOL!

Yes!!! I can click the detailed usage and see how I do every day! What got us in trouble last month was I had multiple tabs open with all the live owl cams, and what really put us over was we don't get ESPN anymore, and my husband likes to watch golf and he figured out how to live stream the US Open, the British Open, etc, and was running that too all the time last month.

Now that we know how to monitor our usage we can both stream video but can keep it "under control" now. 😊
