lynn Good morning! I guess I missed some excitement last night! Lately I'm not a night owl OR an early bird! Today is our usual day for little outings and summer fun...parks, dog walks, ice cream, etc., but maybe during the week I can take a nap and watch for McGee! I've been reading posts, liking sometimes (when they don't disappear, watching Molly, but not posting quite as much!) I'm sure that will change. Have a good day, owl friends!

vicki in nc Carlos said it's his theory that when Molly begins tearing at her food, as she's doing now, rather than eating it whole, it's a sign that an egg is about to hatch. Interesting.

Owosaurus I heard that too but didn't expect to see it the day the first egg is supposed to hatch. It is interesting! (and so we keep watching even when we have laundry to do and errands to run!)
Today, 11:13:42 - Flag - Like - Reply

Lynda C I heard Carlos give that theory, too. But, from the beginning of this clutch, I've often seen Molly tearing at bits of food when she is just snacking or when the food delivery is too large for her to swallow whole.
Today, 11:14:42 - Flag - Like - Reply

nancy from vermont Noted this also, but concluded that she removes the head and swallows it separately, than consumes the rest whole.
Today, 11:22:33 - Flag - Like - Reply

JH (Owls ≠ People) She picks at food like that all the time. Nothing unusual there. The first egg is still a week away from expected hatch date.

Lynda C Back again for a few. Thanks for the good report, Cheryl! You're doing such a good job, you might have to stay in the UK and miss the NY gathering so that you can keep doing these postings for us. More seriously though, a big thanks to everyone for manning the "night desk".

I see the intrigue and suspense continue to unfold this morning - identification of the other owl seen in the neighborhood earlier, puzzlement over who "Sam" is, etc.

Lynda C A good one, cj. I'm going to "steal" it to use from time to time when things take a "downturn". It's a good reminder to myself, too.

Ingrid (I'm Back) Good morning, it is so good to be back here again to say that to all of you and watch Molly again. Not having the internet for 30 plus hours after the fires I had a lot of e-mail to catch up on. Last night it was more important to catch up with all of you and Molly and saved the e-mail for this morning. Reading below on what happened thanks to Cheryl was so rewarding with a few chuckles too. Hope to unpack the things I had put together in case I had to evacuate and get life back to normal again. Need you all have a great day and I will be back again this evening again if not sooner.

Isn't it cool how we've gotten so attuned to her moods, posture, and various noises? Although, what's also interesting is how we don't all interpret them exactly the same. Just think how many people say she looks like she's staving, or anxious, or sad... when an equal number of us think she looks content or full or even 'hibernating'! LOL. Guess we interpret everything through our own filters. potato/patahto

Just read Cheryl's post about Carlos thinking the visitor was Austin, if it was Austin, that would be the second (I think) Austin sighting around the box. I would have thought that if anyone would return it would be Wesley because of the way she's kept hanging on!!

Trouble is it's very difficult to tell for certain who it was as they all look fairly similar now!! I think even if Carlos had actually been outside when it flew over he would have difficulty saying it was definitely Austin - I think they thought it could also possibly have been Pattison or Wesley but they were going more with Austin! ... either way I think we're all agreed that it was one of the previous brood 😊

Hi Strellichka 😊 Am I right in thinking you got 'busted' by Sam(??) yesterday!! Hope you didn't get into too much trouble 🙄

I may have got it wrong but I thought it was under your posts yesterday where a Sam (I think) had posted and said that they had just got off the phone with you and you were supposed to be getting stuff done or something and you weren't supposed to be on here? I'm really sorry if I got that wrong 🙄

Deliveries/Actions from last night as far as I can work out:

9.40pm - Molly Flyabout
11.05pm - McGee shows up but Molly doesn't let him in!
12.46am - McGee Food Delivery (rat?)
3.35am - McGee Food Delivery (rat?)
4.10am - McGee appears along with another Owl (Probably one of the owlets from previous clutch)
4.20am - McGee flies off and Molly goes for quick flyabout to Kestrel Box and Back!
5.20am - McGee turns up with Food Delivery (another rat?) ... but when he flies off he has something from the pantry with him - assume Molly wasn't satisfied with its quality LOL!

Cheryl, as to your post earlier about food deliveries. When you mentioned "last night" and 2 treats you do mean the night of July 31st ?? and "tonight" being Aug. 1st and "surpin big" was delivered a few hours ago ? This is still a mystery. The owlets must be hanging around in another section because once it got light there (around 6 am there time) only two owls were there - the one behind the wall and another one (looks like a male) out front (see picture). Lots of folks think it's a mom and dad but maybe the owlets are hiding behind the wall and we only see one of them peeking out sometimes. It's very confusing there. I've taken lots of pictures but it's hard to understand it all without knowing what the structure looks like. Seems to me there are several places to hang out off camera.

Press the PrtSc button - it won't seem like anything has happened, but it has. Then, Open the MS Paint program and click Paste (or press CTRL, and V at the same time.) Then use the screen grab tool to copy the portion of the picture you want to save. Click on Copy, or press CTRL and C at the same time. Open up a new Paint window and hit Paste again. Save this image onto your computer. Then you can use it to post on here. (Here's a tip in MS Paint before you paste the 2nd copied image, resize the Paints document window to a smaller size. That way when you click Paste, your window will match the size of the copied area.)

 The first time I saw the strange owl was just a few seconds after McGee came in - which was around 4.11sh - I reckon you may have just missed the second flypast with your last big shot of the outside box as you can see McGee looking and I did manage to mentally make a note of the time when I saw it - pity I wasn't so quick at hitting the flipping 'snipping tool' button!!

 There's a couple of ways of doing it - I use the 'Snipping Tool' which is part of windows I think! If you google it, it tells you how to set it up - I honestly can't remember where I found it but I've got it permanently easily accessed on my bottom bar on my PC now!! The other way is to hit Ctr, Shift and Print Screen and then open Paint to edit and save it.

 George how do i get a screen shot from here?
 Today, 07:54:20 - Flag - Like - Reply

 A lot depends on the operating system you're using.
 I use a little utility program, which is easy, to me.
 It's called ScreenHunter 5.1 Free.
 You can Google it or download it from download.com
 It's easy to download, install and configure.
 It has a hotkey, so you only have to hit one key to take the shot.
 Hope this helps.
 Others use other methods.

 Greetings from Iowa. Thanks to everyone who posted about the 3rd Owl this morning and the events and actions of M & M. So interesting. Carlos has mentioned seeing another owl a couple times. He felt it was one of the earlier babies checking in. He thought McGee would be more aggressive if it were a strange owl.
 Again.. everyone.. thanks for keeping the rest of us in the loop.

 What time did McGee finally show up last night?
 Today, 07:30:00 - Flag - Like - Reply

 Cheryl Owen
 Last night He turned up twice with a treat both times - once at around 12.40 and again at 4.40sh - the second time was about half hour after the 'strange' owl appeared - some people from the other chat room thought it was a strange owl bringing the treat - but that absolutely wasn't the case - it was definitely McGee. Tonight I know he turned up with 'Sumpin Big' a few hours ago but haven't checked in the basement for times yet! He may still turn up before daybreak with another treat!

 McGee didn't seem interested in chasing the other owl at first. I wonder if it was one of the first clutch and they had a little reunion! Molly must have flown hard, because she was breathing harder than normal when she first came back in.

No, Molly isn't keeping McGee out, it seems as if he were tring to either call her out, or calling to the other owl. He first landed on the perch and called, and I thought he was calling to Molly, but then the other owl flew by. He kept watching it, and never went in to Molly, but kept doing the "Deet" call.

At about 4:13am another bird (appeared to be another owl) flew by while McGee was sitting on the fledgling (closest to the mimosa tree). Molly was in on the eggs and McGee hung his head and looks curiously at the other bird. I think maybe Cheryl was right last night. I was staring at this happening and didn't take the picture so I hope that Carlos comments later and/or reviews the tape of OB2. I can't believe I saw that!! I was so tired but that REALLY woke me up. That's when all the chirping started when McGee went over to the house to talk to her about it.

I'm totally convinced now that the owl on top of the box was not McGee last night - I suspect the owl Molly chased off earlier wasn't him either. I'm shaking LOL! I still think it was one of the previous brood as there doesn't appear to be any real aggression - just wish I'd been able to get a shot of that owl as it flew past!

Molly is fine! I don't think its a real issue, McGee was there making sure the other owl didn't get too close - but I still feel that it was probably one of the last brood hanging around - after all they only left the box about 2 months ago!

I must be thinking of a different time - perhaps on a night when peeps were posting lots and lots of Haikus or something. But I certainly do remember a black-out and your suggestion to everyone to do the Haikus and perhaps something else. It is late and I am older than you so "that's my story and I'm sticking to it" (Collin Ray song lyrics).

I did not find out about the Moly story until after all four of the owlets had already hatched. I figured I would watch for a day or two but found myself checking in each morning and showing DH how much they seemed to change even if it was just overnight. I hope I get to see one or all of clutch 2 babies hatch, but things are coming up on our calendar and friends are also expressing strong interest in coming to visit us in August. The nerve of them!

 Well, AZ, from the pics below, we know it's still there. Funny how our minds perceive certain things. One night, I swore all night long that a rabbit was lying on the old dowel porch! Turned out to be a pellet, but for a long time there, the waving pixels made me think I was looking at fur!!!

 I know Merritt. I was always thinking the same thing - that an animal of some sort had been dropped and left out on that dowel porch! Well, at least this topic provided some good brain activity for all of our brains as we continue to wait for McGee or in the cases of some peeps - those that are still wide awake and cannot sleep just yet anyway. 😊 Also, thanks to JL for being so quick with photo proof on this subject. Good job JH!!

 Merritt and others: I take back my comment above. Here is a very close-up shot of the owl box when everyone fledged. The perch is attached near the bottom of the front wall of owl box which I never paid attention to before. So it appears that when Carlos did the remodel and removed the slatted "ledge ledge" he must have attached the solid floor platform to the bottom of the owl box and had to make that notch hole to accommodate the perch tip being a bit lower. All this time (even during clutch #1), I thought the perch was attached to the owl box much higher than at floor level. I always tell myself I learn something new each and everyday and today/tonight/tomorrow is no exception for me anyway. LOL 😊 I will now return to my former perch where my laptop is...

 Well, I'm back again, and all I know is that the rabbit she took away had been in the pantry for some time. McGee presented it to her as if to say, "Aren't you going to eat that?" and when he left, she removed it from the box! Evidently, it wasn't something she was going to eat or feed to the babies. Must have been something wrong with it.

 Molly got really defensive and wouldn't let McGee in the box. It mostly happened in the doorway so you couldn't see much, but it looked like a fight. Much wondering if it was some other owl, but who would Molly fight off like that? <st folks seem to think she was just telling McGee to come back with food next time, but it was much more harsh than we have seen her be before, or at least recently.

 Molly was squacking and then started to chirp like she does just before McGee shows up.
 An owl, we presumed to be McGee landed and flew into the box with a mouse.
 Molly met him at the door (she was facing the door), and wouldn't let McGee go beyond. It looked like they had a bit of a struggle and the male left the box. The treat in hand was left on the door step on the door. You can see it overhanging.

We initially thought it was McGee, and it might have been. But now some of us are wondering if it was another male owl who accidentally got confused as to where "home" is. Or it might have been one of their earlier owlets coming home for a bit and was chased off.

Oh she is! Didn't mean to imply she wasn't comfy. Just noticed a little while ago that she would sit down, get right up, move the eggs, sit down and do that several times before settling in. Just remembering how I could never get comfy while pregnant. It seemed that maybe she was sensing movement in the eggs.

If McGee stopped coming, Molly would abandon the eggs and go hunt for food herself. Let's hope that doesn't happen. I agree. She would be very agitated if she was that hungry. They can go a day or two without food if needed. We don't know what she is actually saying when we hear her 'call'. She may be saying she's fine to him. I think they know what is going on better than we do thankfully. There is no reason to think he will continue to do that. Wonder if Molly requires less food in the heat? She seems rather content to shed the extra lbs. Most animals tend to eat less during the warmer months, even people. Our lab gets huge over the winter months but always seems to shed the extra lbs in summer time.

Yes. She requires less food to maintain her body temp in the summer. Was reading a living last night that spoke of the reasons barn owls likely evolved to nest/roost inside structures. They had calculated the energy savings gained from living in protected environments down to very minute levels. Too tired to look for it again right now, but will try to remember to post a link tomorrow.

It took me forever to log on because SPO only allowed a certain number thru at first. I tried all kinds of ID's before suddenly, one of them worked! I got in, and stayed in until one day in late April, when the chat booted everybody off and we all had to log back in. A quiet moment - I mentioned below in a couple of threads that my mother-in-law also suffers with Alzheimers and so often is "locked" within herself. We always try to just talk to her about family activities, what we have been doing, etc. and try not to ask questions or begin with "Do you remember . . .". She does know that she can't remember what she ate 5 minutes ago or remember from one day to another and will reply "I can't remember." At times she can remember a few things from many, many years ago (not unusual with dementia). Her name is Avis. When we visited her today and were talking about names, she told us she was named Avis and that Avis was Latin for "bird" - which is correct.

Remembering things from way back in their past is very common for Alzheimers patients. I used to work as a nurse and I worked on the Alzheimers wing of a nursing facility. They really loved looking at "old" pics and telling us all about the people in them (sometimes, I'd bring pics from 1940's, 50's, or so and that would start conversations about how things were then). I really loved spending time talking with these special people.

My mom couldn't remember my name most of the time after her stroke but, she did seem to know I belonged to her. She called me Mary Emma most of the time...her sister's name, I had never met her. After mom died we found pics of Mary Emma and were surprised to see I actually look a fair bit like her.

Pretty good Kathryn. Temps were so much cooler here in NC today, made for a nice evening. Just unwinding a bit, figured I'd check in on the owls. Plus chat here is always guaranteed to be a hoot!

No, the toe does not hurt anymore, thanks! The color underneath has turned every color of the rainbow, it's splitting all over the place and is ugly as heck, but thank goodness no pain! I'm not sure when the nail will fall off, the doctor said it could take up to three months or so.

That was a real "ouchy" then. Glad you saw the doctor. t can get very painful if pressure from swelling and/or bleeding builds up under the nail.
