This tells me that they're still not ready for fledging. She swung it to them and they grabbed it. She won't let them come out for it yet.

When you watched your owlets fledge last year, did they all make it? What happened?
Today, 23:25:14 - Flag - Like - Reply

vicki knutsen
Hi Mary....Yes, thank God, they all did. One did fall however we didn't move. We waiting until Mom left and then my husband picked him up and climbed the ladder we had standing against the tree and placed him back in the nest. Not sure if you know about palm trees, but the frawns are deadly and they were really back in really well. Also, the baby was quite large and hubby had to wear gloves to keep from getting bitten. That went well though. It took about a week before all of them fledged. They wouldn't go far and always come back to the nest. All in all it took about 2 weeks before they finally left. Mom and Dad came back again and we now have 3 again this year. We'll do it again this year!! Sorry for being so worry!

Hi Pam.... I think he's just tired of waiting for food. Maybe he's thinking about going out on his own tonight. Just kidding. He's not ready yet and besides Molly will let him know when it's time. She will start coming with teasers and coax him out of the nest box. It's really fun to watch. I watched mine fledge last year. Of course my hubby and I stayed up all night in sleeping bags in the back yard, but it was worth every minute!!!! Got lots of pictures.

 I agree with James, (in Cognito) the night crew regulars have created a superior chat room.

Could it be that the clever and smart (alecky) folks are more likely to be night owls anyway? Anyway, love it to bits. Also, who coined the euphemism, 'treats'? It's hilarious, but I keep thinking M&M are bringing them ice cream and cookies. ... 😊

 Sometimes, because they are very top heavy at this stage and don't have the best coordination. But it truly is normal, and just one of the dangers that owlets face. That's why I sometimes sigh with frustration when people say (perhaps jokingly, of course), "Come on little owl, step out that door!" They are not ready yet! But, Max is at least now almost ready. He should step out within the week, when he's 50 to 60 days old. Then it will be developmentally appropriate.

So, let's see...was that first visit McGee? I couldn't see a treat and he did try to go inside the box. Has McGee ever been totally inside? Would the owlets even let him in?

First was Molly. McGee has been in the box many, many times - Mostly while the owlets were small, but they have no reason to keep him from going in.

When the owlets were very small he would in fact enter the box and bring food and then do the owl bonding thing of landing on top of Molly. Not crashing onto her but sort of landing on her and stay there for a few seconds and then would leave. That is when Molly never left the box except to do a fly about (sort like a break and flap her wings outside of the box and use the "facilities" outside of the box). But now that the owlets are so big, McGee doesn't go into the box and Molly just visits them inside once in a while. Others on this chat, correct me if I have mis-stated anything in answering Linda's question.

I wonder where "sleep tight" came from? What does it mean, anyway? I used to hear, "and don't let the bedbugs bite" and thought that was just a funny saying but I now hear that bedbugs are REAL and in a lot of motels and even the best hotels. Ewwwww

Linda, before slats or a steel bed frame, mattresses used to be supported with heavy rope criss crossing back and forth beneath them to hold them up. If the rope had slack, the mattress would sag. You had to keep the rope pulled tight to support the mattress right. Hence, sleep tight!

"sleep tight" refers to old style beds...they used ropes across to hold the mattress instead of wooden slats....so, to sleep tight meant your mattress was comfortable instead of drooping. Not sure where I read or heard this...but, I'm pretty sure it's correct.

Good night, sleep tight,
Wake up bright
In the morning light
To do what's right
With allyour might.

Variation:

Good night, sleep tight,
Don't let the bedbugs bite.
And if they do
Then take your shoe
And knock 'em til
They're black and blue!

I don't think the phrase is old enough for rope beds, and this site agrees with my hunch. <http://www.phrases.org.uk/meanings/sleep%20tight.html>

OED lists the first published use at 1933 - long after the rope beds were out of fashion.

2 years in the wild is average from what I've heard several times. Mainly due to predators, flying into autos, eating poisoned rodents and any number of other reasons. In captivity that number skyrockets and there have been 18-20 year old owls on record.

Carbs has apparently turned on the original internal night camera that came with the box. It has an infrared light on it. He hasn't been using it because it does just this and makes it actually harder to see the owlets. But if he shows us the view inside the box, it makes it easier to see them. Don't know if he knows it is on right now. He did that y mistake the other night.

Our box isn't tidy, in fact it's a mess.
And to tell you the truth, we could care less.
There are four of us, so it gets a bit tight.
We'd have more room if Max would diet.
Our mom Molly moved out of this place.
To give us all a little more space.
Mom and Dad drop by, it's habit.
To bring us gophers, mice and rabbit.
They probably watch over us, dose by from a tree.
Keeping an eye on the others and me.
It won't be long until we too will flee.
But this dirty little box will always be home to me.

There's some debate in the moderated chat about whether it was Molly or McGee and whether or not s/he dropped off anything. The flight pattern was McGee, but the perch suggests it was Molly. Some say a mouse. I thought it was Molly and I thought I saw her drop a mouse into the box. Carbs got a photo so we should hear soon!

I thought I saw something in it's mouth also. I have a pretty long delay right now between 4 different screens and watched the whole scene 3 times. It must have been a mouse. Don't think they would have entered the box like that if it didn't have anything to offer.

James, just for fun I went ahead and made a PDF for the same period using DoPDF, from now back to 7 am. Mine was 34 MB, but after I used the reduce size feature it was 4 MB. Should I go ahead and put mine on the wiki since it is smaller than yours? Or do you want to see if you can shrink yours? Or should we put both up?

I'll mess with my editor tomorrow. I'm determined to see what the difference is. I copied an entire blog the other day, just as long as one of these chat streams, and it came out at only 2mb. Same number of pages and same software/settings, but only 1/3 the size. Something's crazy with that.

Arrived back in Maine last evening after a LONG journey from FL. When I checked to see how the owlets were growing and scrolled back to recent chat, pictures, hahas, etc I was SO disappointed to read some of the disturbing comments that had been made by names/posters that were unfamiliar to me. Glad to see that things are back to normal tonight. You folks (regulars and newbies alike) are still as awesome as ever in keeping things in perspective and showing Thanks folks. I can tell you from experience that I have watched several owlets survive fledging from a loft (2 stories up) in an old barn when the nearest tree was 30 - 40 feet away. While sad, it is a fact of nature that some owlets (and eaglets, young hawks, etc.) do not survive to reach fledging stage and occasionally one will fall during the fledging process and succumb to a predator (coyote, eagle, fox, etc.). It happens even when they nest in a hollow tree. Ever wonder how those red tailed hawks on a window ledge (??? stories up) are going to fledge from the bldg. in Philadelphia ???

I'd be glad to, Merritt - or, in my absence, feel free to repost it as often as you like. I could tell some long stories about watching owlets, eaglets, participating in the banding of eagles and loons, etc., but the stories might be WAY too long to fit here and might bore you all. Mother Nature can be just as cruel sometimes as it can be beautiful and I think we humans have to be able to accept the bad with all the good!

We would NEVER be bored! When there's a lull between deliveries, maybe you could tell us a story or two (or three or many more!). We would love to hear them. You can post them in paragraphed replies to the post of origin if you need to break a story up due to length, and that way keep each story together.

 To those of you who missed ospreychick's awesome song/poem:

ospreychick
 To the tune of "Walking in a Winter Wonderland"
 Watching owls, just a-chillin'
 in their nest, sure is thrillin'
 they bob and they sway,
 horking pellets all day,
 Just another day in Molly-land.
 Feathers bloom where once down grew:
 Max might be a Maxine, who knew?
 They're precious & sweet
 from their heads to their feet:
 Just another day in Molly-land.
 In the meadow Papa spots a vole and goes into a swift & silent dive.
 When the owlets see it they say, "Whoa, man!
 Just wait until the main course has arrived!"
 So we'll watch as they start flying
 When they leave, we'll all be crying,
 but until then, we're all online friends:
 Just another day in Molly-land.

My husband is tired of me saying "Come here and look at this!!!!" immediately followed by "Never mind. You missed it." When I laugh out loud at something he always says "What?". I used to try to explain or I would read the Haku to him, but after too many blank books I finally resorted to "You wouldn't understand. It's a Moly thing."

It's pretty hysterical. The stretch out their wings, then point one leg straight back and you think "oh oh, is he about to do what I think he's about to do?" About that moment the owl behind him looks up and you can see this look in his eyes like "oh man, don't point that leg at me!". And then... shooting schmutz. Kind of like The Babe pointing to right field.

Very cool. We dissected owl pellets in my biology class a few weeks ago. It was so interesting as we were able to look at the bones and recreate the animals they had eaten. They are very clean. They don't cost much and most kids get a kick out of them, even young ones.

Does anyone know if all of the little guys will depart the nest at the same time (meaning the same night)? I asked our teacher today and she didn't know the answer - I tried to find the answer tonight, on-line, to no avail.

Jan
I don't know about owls, but I've observed other species of birds leaving the nest. There always seems to be a brave one (the first), then the copycats (the second, third, etc.), and then there is the timid one who has no desire to leave at all, and has to be coaxed by it's parents. I wouldn't be surprised if that's the way it ends up here.

I check in and out on this cam, as well as the other great cams offered on this site, so I don't know all the "facts" about their behaviour. Many reassured me the other day, as does your post in pointing out that all is okay with laying flat out'. Thanks.

when they lift up their legs, and you see stuff caught in their talons, makes me think of stepping in a wad of bubble gum...

This song is dedicated to the Owlets from Molly... This was sung by R Kelly Title I Believe I can Fly.

If I can see it then I can do it
If I just believe it, there's nothing to it
I believe I can fly
I believe I can touch the sky
I think about it every night and day
Spread my wings and fly away
I believe I can soar
I see me running through that open door
I believe I can fly, I believe I can fly
I believe I can fly

Ospreychick, I think you posted earlier that your cat watches the monitor when the owls are on... do you try out your poems on the cat first? LOL. I always do. If they like it, then I passes and I can post it. If they look at me like "serbusly?" then I know it needs more work.
