I will have to check back in before zzzzz time. Now I have to give Hubby some owl watching time to watch a movie. It IS his b-day weekend and he does get the whole weekend as he has to share his actual day with Mother's Day. Happened before, will happen again. That's what everyone can talk about while you all wait for the next meals-on-wings: what do we all have to share b-days, anniversaries with etc. Any New Years babies? Valentine's? Thought I'd roll that ball out for ya (Minnesotan for you!)

Volume's set to hyper...will sneak back. Ooo...caught that one!

Teneal - Yes it is! I did that very same thing yesterday...wanted to keep my FB picture to what I have it, but wanted to change my avatar here to something owl related.

You can click on your avatar to change/edit options, and then select the one that say "computer" (i think), or something like that...and then select/browse for a picture from your computer.

Easy peasy.

Whoa...that took me a long time! I said I would be back up "shortly", but I think I spent an hour or more down in that basement. Had to go WAY down there, as I've been gone most of today. So let's see if I have this right. New perch for "branching" - liking it! Several smurfs attacked. Not cool. But many patrols on the box out - Feeling safer. Snow in May - but only rain here in Milwaukee. That's expected in WI...we've had some major snowstorms in the middle of May and 60 degree days in January. That's WI for you. (Joan Schultz, where in WI do you live?) Good to know I was "missed" by Danielle...or Hyun or whomever...flying fish eggs? (courtesy of Merritt "wink") And James is somewhere "in time"...lol

When I go to make a PDF, I simply refresh the browser, bg out then use the "End" key to hit the bottom of the page as fast as it will go, dicking More at every page. Then I use Ctrl-F to search out each instance of "Expand" to open the threaded comments. F-3 key will advance you to the next occurrence of your search term. It only takes a few minutes to go back even 9hrs or more. I also pause both videos so the pages load faster. If you're not doing any of those, then I feel for the time it takes you to capture one PDF. 😞

I think they may be worse than heroin. What is going to happen once Carlos pulls the plug for good? There's going to be a whole lot of people out there with a whole lot of free time on their hands wondering what they are going to do with themselves. Hmm wonder how long Tawny's babies will be in the nest? Wonder if Carlos will narrate for her? I do like my Carlos AM update.

It's been a gift.

It's a little sorry we haven't seen the owls bring in raccoon babies. I know there are probably some raccoon of lionados on line tonight and I don't mean to offend, but it's another night time creature so I would think the owls might occasionally hunt them. Last night raccoons cleared my koi pond, eating all but one fish. I have it protected and even screened but they bosened and pulled back the screen on one corner. I'm not crazy about raccoons today and would be happy to see a couple get eaten by owls.

My sister had a pair that kept getting into her garbage cans. She bought one with a hinged lid, thinking they couldn't knock it off. It sat by her steps. She heard them one night, looked out the window and saw one on the steps, holding up the lid while the other went inside to hunt. Needless to say, she moved it away from the steps so they couldn't reach it. LOL

Hahaha! I had one at my old house that I called the FU raccoon. We had humane traps set and he would come up on the porch, drag the trap to the other side of the porch, reach in and get the food from the trap, leave me his equivalent of an owl pellet and leave. Needless to say the traps were useless 😊

Owls, that is the danger of having a wooden pole for an owl house, especially here in Florida, raccoons are notorious for snatching owl eggs and hatchlings, also snakes, I have watched a corn/rat snake climb 30 feet up in a tree, after my son released him. Funny how sometimes things can work out... nature gives and takes away, it is her heartbeat of life... jeeze, getting maudlin here...

A comment about flagging. Use it when necessary to rid the chat of people who make inappropriate comments, who post multiple messages just to clog things up, and occasionally for those who are here obviously to agitate. But let's try not to jump to conclusions and flag or trash people who are merely suspected of having posted before under a different name.

I urge everyone to be tolerant and a little patient. I'm sure the newcomers to the site get a little tired of the "insider jokes" just like the regulars may get tired of hearing the same questions repeated.

I get the Hyan/Danielle thing, but I want us to remain as tolerant as possible. Some of the regular posters have a great deal of influence and when it becomes OK for them to become confrontational then how can we say it's not OK for everyone? Let's just go back to 'flag and ignore' when it's called for. There's no law that says somebody can't have 15 different names here - this isn't a witch hunt.

I guess I have witness too, much dishonesty on who people are, and they constantly switch IDs, truthfully I never really even thought of it until I came here, not really much of a chat room person. I also saw a certain group from several blogs switch IDs and then talk about harassing etc. to recruit support on certain things and against certain people, it was not hard to put two and two together, it is also not hard to see when kids are spamming, people should be honest on who they are and their intentions, also seen people prey on sympathy, that is really sad, personally I am a open book and have nothing to hide, perbd and that is all I am going to say about that... 😊

Cannot stay long tonight - have much to prepare and also need a good night's rest, as I am going to a longtime friends wedding shower tomorrow. Wish I could stay longer....

Hope everyone has had a great day, and is having a great night 😊

Sure missed a good day with the owls! Missed all the drama (from the owls, that is...maybe human too?). Any more fainting? I heard someone say Wesley's eyes started fading out and down he went. "Such a drama queen" (or king) is what I think I read earlier. They really know how to put on a great show now. They are showbiz kids now and I suppose it's to be expected. Did they do any tap dancing or maybe a song or ?? Did they do a dramatic reading of some kind? Err...is that just what we do. I noticed that JH is back from Cognito but has now left for Congruent. I have heard that the weather is quite agreeable there. Should I scroll to the basement...worth it?

Hyun, I'm not sure why you got the reaction from people that you did because you've given us no reason to think you aren't interested in the owls. I guess we've gotten a little sensitive in the past couple days. So sorry! There are some good links in the messages below to direct you to good information. Another good site is the Barn Owl Trust in England. <http://www.barnowltrust.org.uk/>. There is also information available through the link at the top of this page: "more information".

It takes a few weeks for them to learn how to fly. They start around the 50th day, going outside of the box to flap their wings. Then they will take small flights, to the ground until they learn how to fly. They will hang around to learn how to hunt before they leave for good.

Height-wise, the oldest might be full-size already, but it has been said they will get fatter then slim down after they start flying. They might start flying in about 10 days, or the oldest first, then each maybe two days after each other, maybe. Just repeating what I have heard.

No. My understanding is they will fledge when each gets in the 50 to 60 day time frame. However, I have read that owlets don't like to fledge alone, so Max might delay his first step out of the box until Pat is hold enough to join him. They are only 2 days apart, so it won't be a long delay. What I'm truly interested to know is if Wes will be left in the box alone for a couple of nights.

There are bad people everywhere. However, there are people that visit that have too much time on their hands and try to cause a stir. However, the true M&M admirers know how to ignore them and not give in to their pettiness. We try to teach newcomers how to avoid them and if needed, flag them. These people lack morals and respect for nature.

I don't think there is ever really a line. More of a shuffling huddle. We've seen them pass food back from the door to another owl inside, so the "sharing" concept is somewhat correct. I think it's just exciting for them to all scurry for what ever comes in, no matter who actually eats it.

It's interesting how Magee just knows he has a job to do. I mean... I can understand Molly remembering she has little ones to take care of because after all, she sat on the nest for days and saw them through the hatching but Magee... he really hasn't spent anytime at all inside the box with the owlets, but what a responsible parent, in that he provides a ton of food for them. What makes him feel connected to doing the job, I wonder? Just instinct?

I'm sure it is instinct but WOW. It amazes me. I know a few humans who lack this very instinct of knowing they have to be responsible for their young. It is sad to consider that these wild owls are more human than some humans.

Those wings are made for flying and that's just what they'll do.
On of these days these wings will come right after you.

Carlos is great. First they had the perch, then a porch was put on. There were still worry warts so he built a platform and now today I see a rail dose to the box too. We all care so much about these owls and Carlos I believe has done all of this for our sakes. The time is coming soon for our little friends to start to venture out and then they will soon be gone.

I wrote a little poem about when that happens but don't want to post it until the negative posters are not on to ruin our friendly chatter.

Carlos is such a good man! Went outside and very quietly installed an owl rail to help with the "branching". It looks like they can step out of their box, go down to the rail, then to the older perch that he installed. That looks like a much safer situation to me. People are always so worried about their being 4 owlets. I worry about them when it is time to leave the nest. They seem so safe and secure right now. Thanks, Carlos, for trying so hard!!! 😊

FLEDGING VS "BRANCHING" VS FLYING

Sources vary as to when fledging begins, but most say from 50 to 60 days. Fledging for barn owls is a long process. It begins with the first step out of the nest, progresses to "branching" where they hop around and flap their wings, and ends around day 80 by flying away for good. Max is 47 days old today, so he still has a few more days to go before he makes that first step. Also, barn owls like to fledge with a buddy, so Max might delay his first step out so Patti son will go with him. Patti son is 45 days old today.

Merritt, that may explain all the preening and the paying attention to each other, they have truly amazed me at how they watch each other carefully, the 'kisses', the preening, I really did not expect that, and they actually sometimes seem to 'play' but then children's, or animal's 'play' is really more about learning. This has been so interesting to watch, even the parents in all that they do.

Just my opinion, but I hope that idea is a joke or a rumor. Porches and platforms are one thing, but this would go against all rules of nature and insert too much human intervention. Somewhere WAY down in the basement a few days ago I posted (can't find it now because something happened to my ID and I had to sign in again) that over a few years I had seen some of the fledging process of a few owl families that nested in an open loft on the 2nd story of a barn when the nearest tree was 30 to 50 feet away. Just as with any raptor or wildlife family there is always the possibility of one falling prey to a predator in the process. As sad as that is, it can and does happen. We have to concentrate on the beauty and wonder of what we have all witnessed and let Mother Nature run the show.

I agree with most of what you said...but, mother nature isn't running the whole show when man puts up an owl box

Not the place for a long debate and I see where you are coming from, Regina. Unfortunately, due to human intervention by clearing trees, especially dead trees and housing developments barn owl nesting sites have been rapidly declining for years. For many of the same reasons, the North American bluebird population declined nearly 90% from 1930 - 1980 and with proper installation of bluebird nesting boxes the population has made a remarkable recovery. Likewise, because of an increase in their natural predators such as raccoons and increased shoreline development by humans throughout their breeding range, loons were threatened or endangered in many areas and man-made, floating loon nesting platforms have helped in the steady decline of this magnificent bird.

Is Merrit here? She has the best answer for this question. The short answer is they "branch" which mean they hop out of the nest onto a branch and flap their wings a lot and practice hopping and balance and stuff like that. They will probably end up on the ground a few times. This site has a lot of good information:

He is trying to reach certain goal to help the City of San Marcos build an owl habitat and bird viewing area. Carlos is not making any money. He has invested a lot of money in cameras and equipment so we can watch this. Free. He said you don't have to send him money, send it directly to the San Marcos Foundation the address is posted under More Information above the large screen. The author, illustrator and cartoonist are making money. Don't know if they donate to the cause, but they probably do. $1.00 of their sales does go to the San Marcos Foundation

Let me get this straight, Susan. You get the greatest nature show on the Internet for absolutely free, brought to you by a guy who works an 18 hour day to keep this up and running, who brings the story of owls to school kids across the nation, and who gives the proceeds of the sale of this merchandise to the city of San Marcos for the promotion of wildlife, and you have the nerve to call that "BEGGING"? Don't want to offend anyone, but I see a big Terminex ad next to the image. I know it's not controlled by the site owners, but if you care about owls you would never want to hire a company like Terminex that uses rat poisons. Owls, hawks and others eat rats that ate poison and the owls die too. An entire nest of baby owls can be destroyed by one poisoned rat. Please don't ever ever use rat poison! And you cannot trust pest control companies to tell the truth, they will all say what they use is 'safe' for wildlife. No such thing. Just can't resist this opportunity to spread the word about this to so many people at once!

I don't think that every extermination business lies. We have some great ones here in my neck of the woods. If they were using poison my cats would have gotten sick or been dead a long time ago. I just think it's a disservice to spread such a generalized statement.

I have to agree with you Lourdes. I was actually thinking about this earlier today. I am a total city girl, and I am ashamed to admit that I never would have thought about the effects of the poisons on other animals. Squirrels wreaked havoc on my Mom's house, and I know that the friend who came to help her get rid of them used poison. At the time I just thought of squirrels as pests. Now I think of the other animals that may have been hurt!

I'm pretty sure someone said it was a PDF file. Ask them if they can print that and bind it for you. If you can prove ownership, I'm pretty sure they will.

You might want to talk to another person at your Kinkos! Ebooks are nothing new and Kinkos surely has a way to print and bind the book for you. The only issue is that the file will only allow itself to be printed 1 time. So don't print a copy at home, for fun, and then expect to print it again at the Kinkos store.
