 It means Molly came and sat twice on the fledging platform and just watched the box or rested for awhile. The platform is outside the box to help the babies when they start to learn how to fly.

 Thank you all for the kind comments.
 Those below aren't just watercolor. I think I used the fresco and some others on them, too. (Ack, should have made a note.) All of them had to be resampled due to the low resolution and quality of any screen capture. Some of them had to have the lighting readjusted. But if you know PS, it's a quick job. I didn't do anything fantastic to get them. Here are three more. I'll bbl. I do need to get some stuff done. 😊

 We had some cold rain but during our ride it held off -biked to Peninsula and took the "flag train" back to where we parked. We also biked by the eagle nesting area but we got a downpour and only saw the herons, ducks and geese.
 Took some homemade chicken soup out for dinner to make up for the cold.

 Growing Owls, growing, growing,
 Their faces have filled in,
 With masks of wide-eyed wonder,
 Their snowy fluff has grown into,
 Richly-colored feathers,
 Their legs look stronger and steadier, Now,
 And they can turn their heads all around,
 One way and then the other,
 All cuddling together in a box, Fifteen-feet high,
 They stretch out their wings and screech, In preparation,
 While in anticipation, we watch, For them to venture out and fly!

 I saw a baby pigeon trying to climb up a palm tree the other day...but then it jumped to the ground and I realized it was trying to fly...it's mother flew down and waked along with it...giving it encouragement...and courage too I suspect...I wonder if Moly will do that with her babes?

It's funny how they are lined up shoulder to shoulder, like kids having their picture taken by a National Park sign. Or maybe they'd line dancing to the sway of the box.
It the one at the back the youngest?

I think the one in the middle, standing, is Wesley, the youngest. But, I haven't been able to get a good look at the one in the very back. I do this Wesley is a girl. (S)he is taller than the one on the front left and has a darker face and chest.

Is this a hobby or something you do full-time when you're not owl watching, of course?! My hubby says Carlos' camera set-up is a very, very nice one. He enjoyed seeing the pictures of that too!!

Yes, I am a little envious of Carbs' set up too. He has the camera body and lens that I'd be willing to trade my only auto for, but it's kind of hard to get around on a 500mm lens.
As for me, it's a full-time hobby. I do very little work for hire with it because I don't particularly care to shoot what sells. I.e. portraits and "marketable" stock photography. I much prefer candids if I'm going to shoot people. And I do love shooting like performance, musicians and such. But my real obsession is finding unusual snaps of everyday natural occurrences. Plants, animals, bugs, decay, you name it. I like to shoot the little details that most photos pass by on their way for the calendar shot of a lifetime. 😊

Owl be gone for a while. It's time for martinis and the pool. May be a bit goofy when I come back but I'm sure you can all deal with that. It's Saturday and a little happy juice (as Kristi would say) is appropriate, right?
For those who missed it earlier, I'll leave you (olive you?) with a picture I took earlier today at a bird shelter and rehab center. It's a beautiful pair of barn owls who can't be released into the wild because they can no longer fly, due to injuries. They have a very cool set up for them- hopping stairs so they can get up to the highest perches.

That's a cool contact to have. I know the feeling on scanning. I'm fortunate that I only started with film and therefore only have a few thousand prints/negatives/slides. I switched to digital just as the juices started flowing, so my hard drives and DVD are now stuffed. But I'm becoming much more selective in my mature phase, so I might go back to film for a few special projects. Medium format equipment has plummeted in price. Good time to rekindle the fire if you're so inclined. 😊

It's a new perch he installed yesterday. It's between the owl box and the platform. Molly landed on it twice last night and hung out for a while. Some folks are always concerned that anything new that appears will scare off the owls. Instead, they adopt everything that's been presented to them so far. 😊 sumaclain I think Wesley is just a low-keyed owl. We got a kitten who slept so much that when she turned 1, we got HER a kitten. She liked her kitten and washed it a lot, but as soon as the new kitten didn't need as much attention, she went back to sleeping all day...and we now had two cats! We love them both...in addition to the third, orange-striped male kitten who came LAME...he's rambunctious! I guess my point is that they came in a real variety of personalities...like the owlets! I just don't have the time today to figure this out. So I'll post a shortened version. 😊

I was in the 2001 Nisqually earthquake here in Olympia 6.8. It was exciting because I was volunteering at my daughter's elementary school at the time, but her class had gone back to their room. We were on the second floor and it took a few seconds before the volunteers and teachers realized we had to evacuate the kids. Everyone was fine and I eventually went to check on my daughter. Phones, cell towers, and electricity was out. I couldn't get in touch with my husband and mother-in-law who were at our house and they were "shaken up" but fine. It was an exciting time and luckily not many injuries. We don't have earthquakes often but with Mt St Helens and Mt Ranier nearby they expect a big one in the next 10 years.

I was at the Florida Audubon Center for Bird of Prey today for their Baby Owl Shower. The hold it to raise awareness and to gather donated supplies for the care of owls, eagles, and other raptors at the Center. It's a really big place and I wish you all could have been there. No baby barn owls in their care right now, at least none that we saw, but they did have tiny baby screech owls.
I met Susie B. who posts here and works at the Center. My husband has not been afflicted with MOD but he was the one who brought up the idea of volunteering at the Center one weekend a month! Yeal We'll be contacting Susie about that this week

Here's a couple pictures from today. I don't know any of these people: just wanted to show what it was like there. Beautiful place on the shores of a lake in Orlando.

Enclosures for birds due to permanent injury. Eagle in rehab, just after a bath in his own little pool. Beautiful barn owl pair. "Hopping stairs" for barn owls who can't fly. Unknown cute kid wearing owl mask in front of eagle nest.

Wow, earthquake this afternoon in southern CA. I was in Palm Springs once for a small one and it was very strange. Don't think I would like to live where they happen regularly, but we deal with hurricanes which are pretty weird too.

I have been through a 6, something quake and was sitting on the ground when it happened, it seemed to have lasted for ever but it was only less than a minute, I think. Been through about 6 hurricanes, would not want to go through a 5, 3's are bad enough, at least you get warnings in those, thank goodness, it is the tornados and flooding that does most of the damage.

You have to stick around for quite a while and observe. There are all sorts of hidden "treasures" lurking inside the box. Below is a screen cap which shows the huge pellet that Max horked up yesterday. It's much less obvious today because it has dried out, and it's blending in with the surrounding fur.

Dudley, the egg that didn't, is still in the box too. The owlets were playing with it yesterday, but it is not visible right now.

For those asking about the "panting" of the owls:

Some species of Owls are able to reduce their body temperature in hot weather by "panting" through partially opened bills. This is called "gular fluttering" - gular having to do with the throat area. Warm air is exchanged ambient air which is drawn into the highly vascular throat where the blood vessels are constricted, thus enabling heat dispersion. <http://www.owlbags.com/articles.php?section=Owl+Physiology&title=Beak>
