Homeschoolinc, there are 3 cams in the box, the one that came with that looks down from the top; one that Carlos installed for daytime viewing that we see most of the time, and one that Carlos installed toward the bottom of the box with infrared for nighttime viewing. Plus he has the outdoor cam. 4 cameras in all.

I also see there's been plenty of treats delivered so far - and whoever is recording them still has a sense of humor!! ... I guess the new camera was pretty good until Moly made her adjustments too... the jaunty angle and swaying isn't doing a lot for how I'm feeling at the moment though - Oh and Happy Mothers Day - although we've already had ours in the UK back in March!

So what happens when they leave the nest, and land on the ground? What is the environment like down below? Is this a neighborhood with cats and dogs? IS there any cover for the owlets to hide in? Where will they learn to hunt? and ... who gets to clean out that nest! 😊
Today, 03:58:07 - Flag - Like - Reply

Merritt
They don't learn to fly like other birds, so it's unlike they will ever be on the ground. (After this one, I'll post a reply about how they learn to fly.) The box is in a yard owned by people who have no cats or dogs. There are lots of trees in the yard and one right by the box. They will learn to hunt within a 1 mile radius of their current location. No one will clean out the nest. Barn owls like it "used."

Sources vary as to when fledging begins, but most say from 50 to 60 days. Fledging for barn owls is a long process. It begins with the first step out of the nest, progresses to "branching," where they hop around and flap their wings, going from limb to limb, and ends about one month later by flying away for good. Max is 49 days old today, so he will most likely make that first step one day next week.

Carbs has it set up so we will definitely see the first step out of the box, but the first fly could happen from anywhere. They will be "branching" for the first few days before their wings actually get the hang of flying.

Christina, far be it from me to discourage you, cause if he were to leave out while you were gone you would want to hunt me down and strangle me. I'm sure. However, I do want to tell you that is probably ok if you want to leave, because most sources say barn owls don't step out of the nest until they are at least 50 days old. Max will be 50 on Monday. For sure he will step out one night next week, but it's unlikely he will do so tonight. Information only, not advice!

Ok, here is the video of the barn owl, Mote, taking a bath. He's the owl I mentioned that can't fly and he's 14/15 yrs. old (not the norm). Interestingly enough, he is also afraid of mice and cats. He has "glass bone syndrome" from improper diet given to him when he was young (lack of calcium). Here's the link to the raptor center he's the ambassador for. I have not visited this center and have nothing to do with it... just came across it on Youtube. I can't vouch for this center. <http://whitelyknoggin.blogspot.com/photos/sardis/index.html>

You can scroll down for more details, but the short story is that Carlos had a new view set up with a much closer look at the door. We watched a few deliveries and it was a great view! Right up until Moly landed on the camera! LOL, now it's tipped but he can't fix it until tomorrow. He's turned on the inside camera - the one that came with the box and doesn't show much.

We've got a different group on tonight so I'm going to re-post a couple pictures I took earlier today at the local raptor rehab center. These are a couple beautiful barn owls who are unable to fly due to injuries, so they are permanent residents of the center. Take a look at the cool "hopping stairs" they built for them so they can get to the highest perches.

The other picture is of another permanent resident - a bald eagle. He had just taken a bath in his own little pool.

They are. It was pretty crowded today so I didn't have a chance to ask as many questions about Moly as I wanted to. I don't know if they were brought to the center together, although that doesn't seem likely. Today was the Baby Owl Shower they were holding to re-stock supplies. Bringing things from their Wish List admission was free. They had a good turnout and had mounds of donated food and cleaning supplies.

I met another one of the MOD people there! Suzie B, who works at the center.

This is great! So you had fun then? I will post a video and link of an owl I found on U-tube last month. He is quite old, I believe, and can't fly due to insufficient diet provided by his original handlers. I think it was a calcium deficiency so he can't raise his wings. I'll try to find the hand post.
