Live Barn Owl Nest Box Cam - San Marcos, CA

This is a live feed of a wild female barn owl named Molly. The owl box is located 15 feet off the ground. The male (McGee) has a white chest and face. He usually shows up after dark but has spent an entire day with the female. For more information about the owls and this cam. Click Here.

Weeks back I remember a conversation on owl wing prints in the snow, here's a beautiful video that shows it, and some graceful flight sequences, by BBC and Motion.

Just checking in. I am not able to see the last of the record of deliveries last night and early this morning. Is there a way to get the space showing is date to expand or the frame of the live cam of the owlets to go lower to show the last of the deliveries? Thanks. I see McGee was a very prolific hunter (does one speak of hunters being prolific or is it only writers?) has tonight, but wanted to see Molly's record on night before and Mother's Day morning. Thanks.

Are you saying that you have a ruby-throated hummer that has hatched where you live Elliott or do you mean the one in the webcam link? That one is a Channel Island Allen Hummingbird. Our Ruby-throated hummers have just arrived in Western Maine this week. The males come first, followed by the females in a few days. We won't see the fledglings until sometime in July.

WOW! Who would have thought the words "scooch", "scoached", et. would have generated such varied answers and meanings. Thanks for your "lessons"! I guess I have never written or tried to spell it, but here in the North we also use the term "scootch" (or "scooch" 😊) down" as a synonym for crouch or squat - i.e. "I scooted down to pick up the pencil from the floor". All very important stuff to know 😊
* scootch (skooch)
intransitive verb
to hunch or draw oneself up and move (through, down, etc.); scrouch she scoached through the window and unlocked the door; he scoached down in his chair to slide as with short, jerky movements scooch over and make room for me on the bench

Just to clarify - it was the camera support that was messed up, not the actual owl box! 😊

Yes, Carlos said he would be straightening the camera today. It's attached with a flexible arm, and that proved too flexible to hold Molly and the camera. He'll probably McGuyver something else unique today.

Just something I was going to post before, but never did. When we see the box during the day, it tends to look small. But when we see the outside at night, I realize the pole is in the middle, and what we are seeing is only half the box! It looks small, but is really bigger.

 I have a couple folks looking for specifics on the original video, from which those scenes were taken. I know a gentleman in the UK who said he thinks it was filmed very near him, as he recognized the power stations in the distance and the Lincoln sticker on the auto. The music video was great, but I'm really curious to see the rest of any footage shot and learn the actual story from that location. Too bad the person who uploaded it didn't include some more info on it's origin. I mean the music/singing was ok, but I want to know more about the Owls!

 ...and, there is also the phrase "scotch down" heard in the rural areas around here sometimes. This page even mentions the hunting tie, of which you speak. I think I first heard it at my little PO box/country store, back when I lived near a bunch of old tobacco farmers. The tiny little store reminded me of something you'd see on Andy Griffith - the same three old men, always sitting around gossiping/complaining about everything.

 Sherry, my only trouble in school was for "failing to use time wisely" whatever that means. 😊

I was not a great student (nor was I a trouble maker) but I always seemed more interested in the details of why? than most teachers were willing/capable to explain. Just one of the problems with a tightly structured curriculum. IMHO. I'd love to go back in time and return to school today, if I could be enrolled into a Montessori method environment. I have friends with kids enrolled in such schools and I am continually amazed at their inquisitiveness and their breadth of knowledge, especially for 8-12 year olds. It's very refreshing to see that.

 Wonderful. Great food, great friends, great laughter, great mimosas = nice long sleep when I got home! I was late to the watch last night, and when I caught on all the chat I missed. I saw where you had asked about teaching and hunting when the owlets are fledging. Wanted to tell you that Molly and McGee will both keep bringing them food until they are 80 days old, or there abouts. I don't know if one of them will teach them how to fly, however. Vicki Knutsen said the other night that the first barn owlets in the brood from her yard, hopped around for two days then took their first short flight, and were escorted back to their nest by their mama.

Glad you had a good time.

As far as the hunting goes that seems to be another time where the Wesley paric will set in--Molly is teaching everyone else to hunt and not bringing any food kind of panic. Just wondered what had been observed in other nests. It's possible that owls don't hunt near their nests so that when the owlets need to "practice" there will be small animals around for them to try and catch.

I am so impressed and amazed at all the time and effort that has gone into the wonderful website some of you folks have created (I won't try to name you all because surely I would forget someone) - <http://mlyowlpnworks.com/> Well done !!! I may have missed them, but are all the wonderful shots captured by viewers and shown in the chat stream included on the Wiki page? ((including those that have been edited just a wee bit 😊)).

Thank you, Lynda C! That's so nice. Yes, it's a team effort all around. We haven't been capturing the screen shots in the wiki, though, sadly enough. And it is sad to think they're all "lost" in the chat stream -- and on people's hard drives, of course (which I guess isn't lost at all). There's limited storage space on the wiki and the PDFs take up a lot of room. Also, there's not an easy way to copy photos from here into the wiki. It would mean downloading the photo each time, then uploading and probably renaming it, filing it, and then inserting it into a page. Better solution would be to use a photo sharing site and let people do that themselves. But that's a lot to organize. 😊

Ellott I am a person who reacts more than most to beauty. I tear easily, whether hearing a beautiful aria, seeing a magnificent painting, watching a child play... And there are times over these past weeks where I have caught a glimpse of a barn owl, in a certain light, at a certain angle, when I've wondered to myself whether there is anything in nature quite as beautiful! I have been forever inspired by this bird. Who would have thought it? I read somewhere that the darker the owl's eyecolor, the more that particular kind of owl hunts at night. If the species of owl has a lighter color eye, it may hunt in the daylight, as well as, the night. These owlets have such dark eyes, compared to, say, a great horned.

Owls' eye colour can give an indication as to its activity time. An owl with very dark eyes is normally active at night (nocturnal), an owl with yellow eyes is active during the day (diurnal), and an owl with orange eyes is active at dawn and dusk (crepuscular). There are some exceptions to this though.

I said I was leaving to go garden, but... one more thing! Just wanted to say, after hearing Carlos talk, that I saw hummingbirds and a red cockaded woodpecker in my yard yesterday! This was the first time seeing this woodpecker and the hummingbirds should have migrated through here by now, so that was a treat too. In the past I've had a couple pairs of hummingbirds, but after our hard winter there's less blooming so I thought they might not stay this year. I was thrilled to see them. Then when I was in the pool later in the afternoon I saw a swallow tailed kite fly over. They are so beautiful and graceful when they fly!

Can't wait to see what's out there today!
