No, you've got it. They may start branching and even doing short hop/flights as early as 50 days, but probably not until 60. They typically stay around until 80 days or so, learning to hunt from the parents and taking longer and longer flights.

Carlos and Donna, it has been a LONG haul for you, providing us with this joyful experience. All of us on this site recognize that without you, well, our joy simply wouldn't be possible. I realize that the "little" ones will soon fledge and with them gone, so will you... Can you please plan a "Last" goodbye session for your internet lurkers (I know there is one planned for real people to meet real people somewhere in the USA). We've all loved to hear your voice and see your face at the 4 AM feedings, you have made it possible that we can all see 4 healthy lovely furry owls grow from "a twinkle in their Dad's eye" to these magical birds. I will miss the new fledglings when they are gone, but I will also miss you.

possibly but it's in direct sun so it will be awful hot for a second clutch. they may return next year or one of the babies could come use it. they said owlets usually stay within 5 mile range of where they fledge. carbs and donna and their family have committed so much this spring to sharing this with the world and one of the regulars said carbs has said it will go dark for the last time when the babies fledge.

Had to check with M&M on this one, their response was as follows
1) Due to the housing crisis in California they are underwater on their mortgage and have decided to fly away from it
2) Now the kids are grown, the place is not big enough
3) They are having a lot of trouble with Peeping Toms and webcams recording their bedroom

 Hey, Max! Let's finish up this leg!

If we don't, it's hard to beg
 for more from Mom and Dad tonight.
 So eat! Or get it out of sight!

I'm gonna miss the easy way
 We have it now. The fun, the play
 With Austh, Wes and Max, and you -
 The MODS: our faithful friends, and true supporters of our Mom and Dad.

 Leaving you will make us sad.
 But do remember we grew tall
 Because you helped us, so we'll call to you when we fly from here.

 Dear friends, this is no time for tears!
 We'll grow, and mate and have our own new owlets, and they'll have a home near here someday. We'll see you soon, as silhouettes against the moon.

 So raise a toast! Or eat a mouse!
 But let's rejoice for Molly's house!

If you leave your mouse arrow in the white area, it pauses the screen, causing responses to back up.

I move mine to the brown area on the sides to keep messages flowing. If messages get too backed up, it will cause your screen to freeze up.

Elaine E I've been toggling back and forth between the humming bird nest in San Francisco, and our Molly's brood. Well, during my toggle this morning, I missed the flight of the last little hummer. Now there's just an empty nest. During breakfast I told my husband, this is probably the last time we'll see this little hummer. He agreed. And we were right. But how wonderful that they both grew to full size and can now go out and gladden other people as they sip nectar from the many flowers in San Francisco!

But I don't want to miss Max's first flight! Today, 09:35:00 - Flag - Like - Reply

James Hill (in Choate) They all eat when they are hungry, and when they are able to eat. If they swallowed a large rodent or partial rodent, then it's likely they can not eat again until after they cast a pellet. They do "share" in the sense that they often eat off the same carcass, with no real competition or struggle to hoard food. At least there has been no real struggle for food that I've seen. Just a few things I have noticed while watching these owlets - the siblings seem to watch out for one another with Wesley appearing to be the most spoiled - last night while I was watching I observed one of the older owlets eating either a gopher or rat and give Wesley the remaining portion - the tolerance level for one another is amazing - we have definitely been given a special gift to see inside the developing lives of these creatures - thanks to the Royals and their enthusiasm for life - Well Done!

I agree. They seem to work well together. Molly set a good example for them by always making sure the younger ones were fed after the older ones. I think once Max and Pattison have eaten, they pass the food onto the younger ones. One thing to remember, in general, animals don't overeat for the sake of eating. We humans do. They eat when they are hungry. The first few deliveries I'm sure are where the battles are but only until the older ones are full.
