Carol Jean, if you are ready to crop now, do you see Image in the upper right? Click and select crop, put the cursor in the corner of your photo and press/hold the left side of your mouse. Drag the lines and frame in the photo. Put the cursor in the middle of photo and right click your mouse & then select crop. When this is done save it to your desk top by pressing upper left corner File and then Save As and choose Desktop. I don't know if you will get t this and it's so lengthy. 😞

If it is loading but then doesn't add the photo, perhaps the file is too large? Have you tried to crop it, Kelly? That will reduce the size so that you can upload the photo.
Today, 14:01:36 - Flag - Like - Reply

Christina Sigvertsen Podvin
Kelly, if you have saved to Desktop, then once you try to post here, there is a Add Images in the bottom left corner of the Share/post box. Click on and press browse. You have to look for Desktop. If you don't see it, press More. It should be easy enough after that. You just need to press Open and you should have a photo deposited here. Hope so!

Yes, keep trying. It is so hard to explain this from a distance not knowing exactly what your screen looks like or how to explain it to another person. But lots of folks have eventually figured it out. Maybe someone should give her screenshots of what to do. I don't use the same program or do it the same way so I can't help much and would only confuse things.

Adam, I see you asked about the cobring pages. Mollie posted about them. She said the program you used rendered them all as small avatar-sized pictures and she was hoping that someone knew of a program that would make them a bit bigger. I don't know if any solution was found but perhaps you know of something.

Bette
on the May 11 photos, the owl sticking his head out of the door is full of white fluff -- so would that be Wesley or Austin? I always assumed it was Max in the doorway, but he doesn't have much white fluff left on his head. 😊

Christina Sigvertsen Podvln
Bette, that's a good point. I don't know now. I guess a new lineup today would be helpful. I studied the pictures again and I'm confused...story of my life. 😊

If you have windows and a PC, there should be a "Printscreen" or "prntscrn" button on the upper right corner of your keyboard. Push that key. It will not look like anything happened. Then open a program like "Paint" or "Photoshop" and go to "edit" and then "Paste new image". It will put the screen shot you took in the program. From there you can edit and crop it. Then save it as whatever name you want. There are other ways to do this as well, but this is what I do.

Nice article and excellent advice. Catnap, might it be worthwhile to save and report this again for the evening/night crowd. I think there is a mistaken impression that once a human has touched a small bird or animal that the parent will reject it. That might be the case if you took it inside for a few days; but careful handling of these baby "critters" for their own safety and protection is usually tolerated by the parent.

Just for the heck of it, I called our local conservation nature center, and they said it is illegal to have an owl feather in your possession, the law dates back to the 1900's. Owls are federally protected and if you have a feather it should be buried, thrown away or thrown on the ground. They said they didn't understand it either. Maybe you don't 😊 have an owl feather.

That photo was taken by Carbs with a digital stills camera, not one of the webcams. If that was your question.
The box came with a web camera installed in it, then Carbs added his own web cameras later.
He has had the box open for over two years.

Think he said after a neighbor told him there was an owl on top of the box. There had been a storm that blew the fence down and that is when Carbs said he thinks Molly and McGee arrived.

In fact if you look at the web cams now (outside), the wood is weathered different than the owl box.

The box did come with the overhead inside night cam. I think that picture with out the cam on the side was taken before he added the cam we are viewing now. He did say after the fence was blown down and the neighbor told him that an owl had taken up residence, he went inside had hooked the wires up to his TV and there was Molly, standing in the box.

The cam must be mounted to the box that was just screwed to the outside. He drilled a large hole, looks about 1 1/2" - 2" in the side of the box. I'm sure he had the cam on, on the TV, and went to out drill the hole and screw the cam box on when she was out of the box. Someone had to be watching the TV so he knew the camwas in the correct position.

Mary Carroll - re Owl feather

I've had this feather for 30 years, along with about 30 other feathers that I collected over the years when I was an active birdwatcher and hiker. They are my priceless treasures: most of them remind me of those days in the woods and fields, without a human voice for miles, just me and the wild critters around me! Back then it wasn't against the law. I don't do it any more, but I'm not going to throw the ones I have away!

How do they turn their head? If you saw them without feathers, you would see that they have long thin necks that can turn easily in all directions. The thick feathers make them look like they don't have a neck at all, but they do. Underneath the feathers, owls are shaped a little like dinosaurs!

They also use their beaks for climbing trees! Since they don't have hands, they climb up a tree using their claws and also grabbing the bark with their beak and pulling themselves up. Holding on with their beak keeps them from falling backward when they are on the side of a tree.

I tend to see them as distracting myself. Of course it's always nice to see some of the fun ones show up temporarily but, one has to remember that the animated images also slow down the web page for all of those folks with slower computers, especially when there are many of them being used on such a content-heavy page as this one. Every animated gif takes two to several times the computer resources to display, both in memory and in processor power. Just an FYI.

Hi Ms. Roban's class! The best thing you can do is go to the places where there is more information about these owls.

First, go here for some really good photographs of the owls, taken from right outside the owl box by the owner, Carlos Royal and his wife Donna Royal.
<http://www.molvbox.wordpress.com/blog/>

Be prepared to see the mother and father owl bringing food to the babies, and remember that the babies eat meat, not vegetables or fruits. Your teacher probably should look at the pictures first and choose which ones you'd like most.

It's just hooked up to his TV and not only a computer screen. He didn't have to do all of this for us. We were happy with the 2 cameras he had installed before Molly moved into the box. I think he would have invested in all the equipment even if it wasn't on the Internet.

I do enjoy the live narrations. Carlos gets a kick out of them, it's clear, as do the kids. And that was a fun knock-knock joke at the end.

My owlbox visitor of yesterday returned today for another look. He must like the view. This time I was able to verify that he is a mockingbird. This bird is the only one that has shown any interest in the box since I put it up 6 weeks ago!

For those having issues with the comments not appearing or locking up your PC:
If you keep your cursor in the white space of the chat then you "Pause" the chat stream. Move your cursor outside the white area and all the comments will come streaming in. This is also why many people have trouble with their screens locking up momentarily.

Be very careful. It is illegal to keep any native bird feathers. This policy is designed to prevent people from harming or interfering with raptors for the sake of their feathers. It also keeps feathers from becoming sellable. Native Americans are permitted to possess raptor feathers for spiritual use. Scientists and educators may obtain permits to keep feathers for their profession.

What Mary says is true but it's unlikely to create a problem unless you try to display/sell items with the feather. For your own personal keepsake there is little anyone would do to enforce the law. That said, I have seen game inspectors show up at outdoor festivals and look through the trinkets being sold by vendors. One woman in particular was selling decorated walking sticks, with feather and bone adornments. They took their task very seriously and seemed to know their feathers. Of course she was in compliance, but it was a rather interesting scene to behold - they had things spread out everywhere for a little while.

Now that I know you transplanted some, I may just try that myself.

I noticed that either the deer or rabbits seemed to enjoy them, and I have a lot of "pet" deer, so it may be another nice addition to my deer friendly landscaping. Love the critters around here and I usually get rewarded with nice photos for thinking of them. 😊

Good morning from Purdy WA. My avatar today is Angie. She is 12 years old and a rescue cat I have had since she was 3 months old. She was diagnosed hyperthyroid in Jan of this year. She has been through the radioactive iodine treatment and is doing great!

If anyone saved or has come across the long list of acronyms that Merritt (I think) posted last night - probably between 11:00 and midnight PST last night it would be great to post it again today and this evening. There were also some suggestions added after that post. I'm too lazy to scroll back into the basement that far and it screws up my computer when I do 😊

Sorry, I see that a page has already been started on Molly's Wiki page. And I stand corrected - those are "owlcronyms" and not acronyms - how dumb of me - DUH!!!

I can post it again for you, and James Hill will be adding it to the Molly wiki. Give me just a sec and I'll post it above.

It is really quite remarkable how their colorful feathers just sort of "materialize" out from under that white downy fluff in such a short amount of time, eh? It seems like they covered themselves with feathers almost "overnight". I find it amazing.

Where did they all go? Last time I checked in, they were all over the place and it looked as if they didn't have any room. Now it looks like there are only 2 owls in the box.

I am not the chat police!

Really, I'm not, so if you want to keep your animated avatar that's fine with me. They are cute and I have enough computer power to handle it. But you should know that we have some Moly visitors who are constantly having problems with their computers hanging up and running very slowly. Animated avatars could be part of the problem. Some computers just don't handle them well. Even some non-animated avatars are pretty large files. Something to think about.
