My momma owl did the same thing to her babies. It's very natural at this stage. Molly has realized as best as I can explain it, that her babies are spoiled. So, she's basically telling them "You can come out now. No branching, no food!!"

you have to be careful placing ducklings... they will need to take them to a wild life place for them to figure out. I learned the hard way... took some babies and a momma duck off a busy road to a pond, thinking that would be fine... but the other ducks were very aggressive. When I went back all the ducklings had died. Now, there was a hail storm. Just tiny pellets though. So don't think that was the cause of death. I heard afterwards that ducks can be very aggressive... never have gotten over it... and can't even watch the web cam of them... hope mom comes home.

Oh I am a stickler too with grammar and spelling, but not on a chat board when you can tell it's just a typo from either typing too quick or a sticky keyboard, that happens to all of us. And I don't mind a smattering of "texting" language to make a point (such as LOL).

What I don't like are children chatting on an adult chat board in texting language, this is not a cell phone here!

OK, I got that off my chest.

They did the same thing last night. I suspect their growing bodies are just about grown and therefore they are not as hungry as they once were. There also has never really been any need to be competitive for food, so maybe they're just not feeling pressured to eat the first thing that comes along??

 Eventually, I encourage my kids to make their own food. Not because I am lazy. However, I believe it gives them a sense of independence and teaches them. I remind my kids all of the time that I was a bitchy and had to fend for myself. And my mom brings me cooking them a meatloaf, fresh green beans, mashed potatoes, and a salad when I was eight. Better now than never. I tell my kids they need to learn to make food for themselves.

 My daughter is 10 and she makes her own breakfast, sometimes lunch, and helps out a lot with dinner. I agree, they can learn a lot younger than people think. My main thing was making sure she puts her long hair back in a ponytail when cooking on the stove because we have a gas range.

She's still not great at mixing things in bowls yet, without splattering the entire contents out.

I remember my gram-maw, and the smell of sugar-coated lemon drops when she opened the candy tin...
Then she opened her tin of snuff, spit on the lid and swirled a pinch of tobacco around into a paste with a Slimu-dent wooden toothpick and swished it in between her teeth and eventually spit it out into a metal wastebasket.
Where did a country girl with German parents learn how to do that? I finally outgrew the lemon drops, but still have a fond memory of marshmallow circus peanuts...

 The final night after striking the set, they have a pizza party at the school. For the last two years, the parents have talked about going to a pizza place, but the kids actually prefer the school because they can be as loud and crazy as they want to be. They give out gag awards and such. That is the official school cast party. There are sometimes other things other nights, but they are really just subgroups and not the whole cast. They seem to like this method.

 So I have a laptop confession to make. I ended up getting such MOD that I took my wireless laptop out of the office and then I "st" with my family in the living room while we watch TV or talk but I have the box showing with the chat room here with the laptop on my lap.

But this is the kicker. I noticed a couple of days ago a bright red flower looking thing on my thigh. I have the laptop on my lap so long that I am burning my skin where the battery/fan is located! AWKK! So now I have to sit with a towel beneath the laptop... Hoo Boy, again!

Oh, Kathryn! That's funny and sad at the same time. There was talk in the chat not too long ago about a cooling pad you can put beneath a lap top. I have a little lap top cushion to buffer the heat, and it only cost about $10, but even with this cushion, I could use that cooling unit, too!

Also, if you're sitting with a towel under the laptop, you're possibly overheating the thing with poor air circulation. Could be related to the lagging memory and lockup issues.

The Fledgling
Edna St. Vincent Millay

So, art thou feathered, art thou flown,
Thou naked thing?—and canst alone
Upon the unsold summer air
Sustain thyself, and prosper there?
Shall no more with anxious note
Advise thee through the happy day,
Thrusting the worm into thy throat,
Bearing thine excrement away?
Alas, I think I see thee yet,
Perched on the windy parapet,
Defer thy flight a moment still
To clean thy wing with careful bill.
And thou art feathered, thou art flown:
And hast a project of thine own.

I saw all the grits comments below, so I'll share a story about them. We moved from Texas to Ohio when I was in 6th grade. That year, my sister who is a year older than me, had a new friend over for dinner.

We were having grits. My mother asked my sister's friend, "Would you like some grits?" And she answered, "Sure, I'll try one or two."

LO! We all burst out laughing around the table. My mom even tried to separate two little grit kernels to put on her plate. 😊

She never lived that down. We all moved back to Texas a few years after that, and the rest of my family except me are still there. I'm now in Oregon.

Mary Laura, Oregon has some distinct climates. I live in the high desert at about 3600 feet, and it's dry and sunnier than the "Valley" or Portland area, and the Coast is an entire different animal. Make sure you research which area of Oregon you would like to visit.

While I'm at it, let me see,
Could I make them wait til 3:00

Still can't quite deduce this door
Better make it half past 4:00

May be closer to old 5:00

Keep 'em guessing, that's the game

A couple more. This shows you how barn swallows live. Once there is no more room in the nest, dad sleeps on a fake owl put up by previous owners. lol. Once babies get bigger, moms sleeps on edge of neststone. Both parents take turns feeding babes during the day. I originally posted pics the week they hatched. Yesterday, they began flying. Now (tonight), I really looked like an idiot taking pictures. I had to lay on my back to get these so you get an idea how they nest at night. If I remember correctly, they too are monogamous. Again, this is 15' up. If I remember correctly, they will soon leave the nest.

First Flight Jitters
(from the viewpoint of Pat watching Max)

I groom,
I stretch,
I lock,
I see,

I step,
One, Two, Three,

I dream,
I'm scared,
I watch,
I wait,

He ponders,
He wonders,

He stops,
He hops,

Back ...

Now I breathe!

I groom,
I stretch,
I lock,
I see,

Until it's time for me!

Just a quick hello, some pics of our barn swallows who began flying today, and I hope every one had a wonderful day today. I may be back tonight. In the nest, you can see horse hair that the parents used to create the nest. These guys love flying through the water when I spray it up into the air. They are used to us as they are occupying our front porch. To get closer, I had to get our eight foot ladder out. Still not as good as I would like. I am sure my neighbors thought I had lost my mind sitting on top of a ladder, in a sundress and snapping photos of my porch ceiling. This is their second year (as far as we know).

All three, last year we had five.

I think Dad.

Oddly, I talk to them a lot. My mom told me she read that birds "communicate" through eye movement. She found her Love Birds calmed down when she would blink a lot. I do this to my finches and it seems to help. So I blink and talk to them.

I now understand what happen with our IT dept last night. The 8th grade boys thought that it would be a joke. I didn't think that it was very funny at all, it was hurtful, very painful - I didn't sleep well

I am not trying to be "Dickens" or "Shakespeare" I just want to be the best person I can be.

Thank you for allowing me to explain the boys don't think before they speak. They think everything is a joke, not realizing that feelings are being hurt. They did a terrible thing to our house mother - they wrote that she was in an accident on her twitter page - those boys should be held accountable for their actions. I have a strong feeling they will complete the year computer free (including the library).

I'm sorry, am very sorry for the stress that they caused. Halle, Annie, Cheryl aka "Lost in San Marcos" and our house mother Phyllis "olowbeeb" thank you all!

LOL, I'm sitting here watching owls anytime day or night and never gave a thought to actually being filmed myself. Have you ever seen those pictures on the internet of people who are caught on film at Wal-Mart? Wear a big hat or nice clothes I guess.

I know how we can spend our time when this is over. We'll have a convention to sort thru thousands of pix, posts, poems, etc to compile "Molly & McGee, a 2010 Owl Odyssey." And in the back will be avatars w/ just a blurb on whos who. But let's meet somewhere warm!

Re: Bonnie Higgins poem below and Coleen's reply about "diapers in casinos" - I think I saw some of those folks at casinos in FL this winter. Gosh, it's not just a fun day out for them, it's an obsession. Well, this site is an obsession, too; but doesn't cost us a cent except a few burned potatoes, carrots boiled dry, appointments missed, etc. Have any of you been late to work and used the excuse, "I just had to watch Molly for a while because there was no one else to take care of her" ??
