Good time to re-post the Against All Odds link again http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Rq5SDMG4weU&pbypnext_from=TL&videos-h-fIPxJW3o
I've seen some comments about the possible effects of human handling here. I'm pretty sure those were wildlife biologists who had banded the owlets. From experience with watching banding of eagles and loons, this would have been done humanely, quickly and skilfully and obviously in the case of the owls with no adverse effect.

Today, 14:46:34 - Flag - Like - Reply

If I remember that video correctly, the food supply was very poor and the parents sensed that fact and knew that some or all of them would succumb to hunger and had to make some tough decisions to save some or none. Birds and animals have some extremely complex instincts. Unfortunately, Mother Nature can be cruel sometimes from a human perspective. It can also provide us with such beauty - and for that we are all extremely grateful.
Today, 14:53:28 - Flag - Like - Reply

Annie, am I correct in reading your post that you were referring to two different videos? Against All Odds doesn't show the parents attacking the babies; but I think I have watched another video where they did just that.

Minimize your web browser window and look for a pop-up warning or other dialog box. There is likely one waiting in the wings for you to respond. That is also a common problem when people are having difficulty logging in here. Look behind the window, but pay no attention to the man behind the curtains.

I think you'll have a lot of agreement to your thoughts and sentiments. Some people never want to look and find things for themselves and want other people to do their research for them. Even when answers are given they sometimes keep posting the same question. I don't think they know that answers are usually given just below their original post. I never go there, but isn't the other chat room just a continuous stream of "chatter" with no specific place to answer question?

Yes, new feathers are also called blood feathers. They emerge covered in a sheath or quill and containing a blood vein. Gradually the vein will retract and the quill will flake off as the feather grows. When preening the birds are removing the quill flakes.

Yes, the 500mm lens Carlos uses IS a Canon 500mm L lens. "L" signifying that it is a professional level or "Luxurey" lens. Only Canon's "L" lenses are white in color. You will notice white lenses all along the sidelines at major sporting events.

Bill, if I had it to do over again (could afford it) I'd probably be Nikon all over. Their flash system is phenomenal for what I want to do - no studio, just several off-camera wireless strobes used to shape some light.

You may already know of this guy but, Joe McNally is THE man when it comes to Nikon off-camera flash work. Plus, he's a great guy to read. <http://www.joemcnally.com/blog/>

James Hill (in Terest Yelding) Diana, it's true, I don't have a tv but, there is no escaping the reality of the situation - It is IMPOSSIBLE to escape the grasp of TV on everyday American lives. So, unfortunately, I do know about most of the dreck on TV. My friends and relatives insst that I'mkept up to date, whether I like it or not.

As a retail buyer (in a former life) I also had to keep abreast of faddish nonsense to make a living. I once purchased 10,000 American Idol DVDs. Oh, the horror! Today, 12:12:09 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by Kristi Smith Diana

Diana Not really related to PITA, but wonder what all the copyright thing is about all of the sudden. Not that I blame them for wanting to protect anything that might come of all this in the future. Maybe it isn't sudden, but when the question of a calendar came up, Carbs said have at it if any were interested in doing one, because he wasn't going to James Hill (in Terest Yelding) He was being asked if others could use his images to make their own calendars and books for sale. It's a slippery slope once you say yes to anyone in that instance because, if you do, then you are much less likely to be able to protect yourself in any future copyright infringement lawsuits. It's best not to allow anyone to have permission to sell/distribute your own images because you risk losing complete control over your work. He's an amateur photographer, but he has some amazing images with some commercial value. I don't blame him for not allowing it. I'm the same way. I will let people use my images for personal screen savers, for themselves, but I will go after anyone using distributing MY images without my approval. lissanne Merritt - re your question, somewhere back there: how can owls swallow without the tube's collapsing? That tube is the trachea, and it is reinforced by rings made of cartilage, sort of like the hose on your vacuum cleaner (vac cleaner? whazzat???) - except that in the vac cleaner hose the reinforcement is a spiral, in the trachea these are individual rings. The important thing is that the glottis (that's the tiny hole you see when you open their mouth) is at the very front of the mouth - that's where air first enters the respiratory system, the entry is not blocked, even when the owl's mouth is full. The cartilaginous rings keep the trachea from collapsing. BTW, in some birds these rings turn to bone in the adult - in us it remains cartilage at our lives.

I posted about that but too far back to retrieve easily. Just wanted to say that in bird species where the males help with the brooding, they also develop brood patches.

Sad but true, I am still here. I tried but my mind's abuzz! Now I only hope that surprise baby I had sleeps a little longer 'cause I won't have the strength. So I went back through some lower levels and you all make me laugh out loud. It really is so much fun...who'd have thought! So the age thing has me again and I tried to scan (normally capable) a kid picture of myself but apparently my husband's made some changes to my computer. I then was dumb enough to call and ask him how to scan. He thinks I need meds now! Maybe I do? So anyways my confession without photo is 1970. Yes, this year's a big one and enough said.

Look at our cute babies! So sweet in the daylight!

Christina...what is the age difference between your surprise and your other children... I had my twins at 40 (almost 41). The big 4-0 isn't that bad...they say 40 is the new 30...and with little ones most folks think I am in my 30s (instead of 46, youcht!)

Well the old as you feel really applies to me. Some days he makes me feel older and some days he makes me and my husband (1961) feel a lot younger. The older boys are 13 & 9 but they make for semi-great sitters. Life is sometimes about perspectives and the trick is to keep them in place, right? They also say the 40s are the new 30s so that puts you in your 30s, right? You're just a youngin'!

(James, you have been inspiring me for weeks!) I've been away for 4 days. Does anyone know the story on the bluebirds? Someone posted that they had fledged, but last weekend, they scarcely had feathers.

They all fledged! Bluebirds don't take long, as I've been made aware with my own box. They all leave about the same time, too. We were informed yesterday that even though the eggs are laid a day or so apart, the mother only begins incubating them once all are laid. That means they all hatch and fledge as a team, sort of.

They were full sized and lots of feathers. They were ready to go and mom and dad kept bring food and not giving it to them. Finally they all left the nest one after another. It was so fast that if you were not watching you missed it. But, there were a lot of fake starts.

The bluebirds fledged on the 20th day which was actually a little late...I guess they can fledge as early as 16-19 days...they were very active and restless on Tuesday and on Wed. morning they left pretty much one after the other from 9:11am to 9:17am. The last one was a little more hesitant...but soon followed his sibs. I missed all four but those who saw it said it was pretty orderly and quick.

I found that statement about that "egg warming spot" again:
Female owls, like many other birds, develop a sparsely feathered area on their bellies called a brood patch. The almost bare skin has a higher density of blood vessels than other parts of the skin, providing a direct source of warmth when in contact with the eggs.

OK, Bill -- what you're talking about is called a 'brood patch.' That's the area on a brooding bird's belly where there are less feathers so that the heat from it's skin can get directly to the eggs. In some species of birds where the father shares the brooding duties, the male also has a brood patch.

I had a dream the other night - a strange one, but that's just me. I dreamed that there was a big RED butt on on the screen beside the video. Anyone could click it to alert all the basement dwellers that some action was about to happen on screen. As luck would have it, every time I laid down and was about to fall asleep, some demented would punch that RED button and I'd fly to the screen. Turned out to be a false alarm. I was. Dang KIDS!

Nurses can't work more than 16 hours in a row I believe. Residents and interns definitely do more than 24 hours, but sometimes they do get some sleep if they are on call and it is quiet. I was useless after working 16 hours, especially after working a 12 hour night shift...if I had to stay for the extra 4 hours in the am, I was just exhausted. Glad I don't do shift work anymore...

Those gasps you heard in your sleep last night? It was the late night MODDIES watching one of the owlets teasing us- holding up a leg above the ledge, thennnnnnn- Nope, back down. No go. Really looked like he might go out, but not yet. It was fun to watch, though!

I have Verizon and it doesn't work for me either when I travel to the Bahamas several times a year. Two weeks ago I bought a MajicJack phone and it worked like a charm down there. (Of course you have to travel with a lap top, which we do.) So long as your signal strength is good (I would say at least 3 bars, maybe 4...2 bars was not enough)..the MajicJack is a great alternative, even if you look stupid talking on a princess phone while your surfing on line! 😊

OH!! Now that sounds like a good option. I do travel with my laptop b/c I download (or would it be upload?) photos from my camera every day to clear the card. Learned that trick the hard way when I lost a camera one year with priceless photos on them. Anyhow, MajicJack would solve the problem of having to call my mother every couple of days so she doesn't think I've done something scary like leaving the country! LOL!!!

I bought mine at Radio Shack to try it out before I left. 39.99. Then I paid for the service to get a phone number 1999 per year. You can pick whatever area code you want, so if your Mom doesn't live near you, you could pick her area code, and she could call you "local." You would have to be on the line to get a call, but she can leave voice mail...which comes in as an e-mail with an audio attachment. I both made and received calls when I was away...although my internet signal was not strong enough at my in-laws to do either. I just went up the street to a friend's. I have a client who uses MajicJack from Argentina with a cordless phone at his house. It's on all the time and he can call his parents in the states easily. Good Luck, gotta go do real work...they better not fly while I'm gone.

Nancy, a much more likely explanation [for losing your history] would have to do with how you log in. If your cookies from this website are removed/changed between log ins, then you lose your history. Sometimes clearing temp internet files/cache is enough to crumble that cookie, so it's very unlikely that anyone else did anything to cause that, your self included.

I love it. I went and checked out the artists blog.
Maybe we should run over and invite her int o Moly Land.
I bet she'd enjoy it here, after all, her webste is Boggy Doodle Land! 😊

Ha, how could anyone not like it in Mollyland? Thanks for linking it to the rest of her work/blog. too. There's a credit to her work on the bottom of the image but all the better to accompany! 😊

Yes, smart artists always include a means to find more of their work.
That's why I went to her site. It bugs me when I see something I like and have no way of finding more. 😊

Kristi, I had the same thing happen yesterday. It worked itself out in a matter of time. It was weird though, posting comments for a few hours without any of them showing up in my history, for me at least. FWIW - I now see 986 in your history. Ya lightweight. 😊

A box made of wood
In a neighboring town,
A camera was added
And look what was found.

Two regal owls
Had made this their home
We all came together
And loved what was shown.

For months we have watched as time ticked away
Soon they must leave us,
Though we wish they could stay.

The things we have learned have taught us so much.
They brought us together
And our hearts they did touch.

Much thanks to the Royals
as we know this must end.
Let them know how we loved it,
much gratitude we send.

Thank you Carbs and Donna
For such a great experience you have shared with so many.

 Owloaurus: I posted this question a couple of days ago and no one responded (I don't think you were on at the time). Might you know if the owls keep this "fluff" as an undercoat or do they actually shed all of it as the real feather emerge? Just curious

Also, those of you stressing about the box being empty, I've already forced myself to begin detox so the pain and suffering isn't so great when the time actually comes. 😊
