Live Barn Owl Nest Box Cam - San Marcos, CA

This is a live feed of a wild female barn owl named Molly. The owl box is located 15 feet off the ground. The male (McGee) has a white chest and face. He usually shows up after dark but has spent an entire day with the female. For more information about the owls and this cam. Click Here.

I was wondering if the owlets need to have shed all of their down before fledging. I was thinking there might be aerodynamic considerations.

I notice that Molly and McGee have longer tail and pinon feathers. I doubt the extra "fluff" will be an issue, but there is more growing to do before full, soaring flight, for sure!

Not really any aerodynamic considerations for these guys, not yet. They will "branch", or hang out very close to the box for quite some time, while practicing their flight maneuvers and learning to control their bodies. They will lose the rest of their down during the next few days, however, so they will look almost just like mom and dad outside practicing.

Afternoon! (or morning!) Lucky living in the UK my sleep patterns haven't been too disturbed while watching - but I do miss most of the food deliveries when I'm working. That doesn't mean to say I don't get a stiff neck and added mind though - and get nothing done indoors anymore either - I'm not working tomorrow and have saved a pile of ironing to do as that means I've got an excuse to stay near the computer and not miss any of the action!...

Boy, I,m with you there. I'm very concerned about how, after taking their first flight, they can get back up that pole to the nest. Other owl videos show the owlets landing at first on the ground then digging their talons into the tree trunk to climb back up to the nest. Has Carols covered this question? This is suppose to be "let nature take its course", but then there should be a tree trunk.

Looks like I just missed Merritt! Looks like no owls stepped out last night, nor did my leaving at 11:30 actually bring Moly & McGee (or at least not right away). I am stopping in again before taking my daughter to school. We're late because she is so exhausted between the play and the AP World History exam yesterday. Everyone here is having sleep issues, so maybe its not just the owls causing it. Maybe its spring and busy schedules as well. I'm going to make sure all of us sleep in on Saturday. (Still need that sleepy emotion).

I feel like we're coming to an end MODS. ... I know there'll be some time - but want to thank especially Merrit and Owlasaurus (whoever you two are!) for keeping us informed... words of knowledge and tying this whole group together. You 2 have been terrific. oh - and did I say thanks - Carlos and Donna! 😊 Bless everyone... Bless Moly/McGee and their babes. Seeeeeeeweeeew - what a little sun can do for a disposition!!!!

phoebe is an allen's channel hummingbird. she has a small red patch in the middle of her chest. her first 2 clutches this season did not make it to hatch. Izard got the first and i think a crow got the second. she was the first bird nest cam and that's how i found molly. phoebe has built 3 nests in this rose bush and has used them several times.

Oh, I don't think we're a group that is actually worried about ourselves. It's just a way of saying that we are in this together, and will miss the animals we have come to care about. The site has raised awareness, has raised money for wildlife habitat, and has brought people from all over the world a place to share, learn and laugh together. Some will go on to do something with animals at rehabilitation centers as you suggest. More than a few will build boxes of their own, and almost all will just be a bit more aware of the wonder and fragility of nature. A great success, no matter how you look at it!

I am right with you on that sentiment. It HAS been amazing how people have joined together around Molly and her family. And if we could just extend that to all animals, including the ones we eat, then all the better. A chicken is not just food, it is an animal, just as much as Molly is. And it deserves to be outside with the room to spread its wings... not just the space of an 8 by 11 sheet of paper for its short life inside a factory. We need to be aware of where our food comes from. And care about it. Thank you.

Good Morning everyone from Orlando, Florida. Sunny and warm with the space shuttles' Atlants's last launch. Titusville, Florida is very crowded right now with over 800,000 people sitting and waiting for the 2:20 PM launch time. God's Speed to our astronaut's!! No step outs last night, huh? As we patiently wait for our little owlets to take flight for the first time, I am vevry excited to see these babies get out and fledged. Have a wonderful weekend!

It's sad to think that our manned space program is about to come to an end. I don't blame those folks one bit for going to watch a launch before it's over. I hope you don't let the spectators get to you too much.

Hi Bette,
Max was standing by the doorway and stretched his wings like he does during the day. He was standing sideways, so one wing was able to stretch through the door. When he folded his wings back down, he folded the outside wing onto the side of the box! He flexed the wing again and brought it back inside. It was just a momentary thing, but someone did catch a screen shot of it, which I didn't think to save so I could show you. But, Carlos might have a pic so check out <http://mollysbox.wordpress.com/blog/> where he posts his pictures. I will go and look there too!

If you would like to add your favorite moment from the night to this summary, please feel free to reply below. The summary is posted at <http://mollyowl.net/works.com/Timeline>. To catch up on past events, be sure to check this out!

The only new development on the Fledge Watch is that Max stretched his wing out through the doorway and for a moment could not get it back in! Tonight's excitement really centered around food. M&M were unusually late with the first delivery, though they did eventually bring in plenty to eat. All are well Fed and will live to fledge another day.

That is funny. I think Max has held the limelight so much that he'll be the last to leave. Doesn't want to give up his place in the spotlight, haha. We released 3 of our barn owls at the Wildlife center last night. It's really cool how we do it. The outdoor building for the owls has a wooden flap on it. When they're ready to be released at the end of the day, I go out and put up the flap. As soon as it gets dark the owls are free to go. We won't know until around 7am this morning when the first person arrives. It's pretty cool how they do it.

Well, I am probably not a good test case for whistles. If I still had that car it would qualify for classic status (Got it new) and I never hit any animal before my dad gave me the whistles but I did hit a couple squirrels afterward.

One did eventually fall off but I was living in the city by then--no deer. (although I am in a different city now and we do have deer that, due to the structure of the park system, do manage to find their way downtown on occasion)

There is a Great Horned owl nest in a park near us and looking at that compared to this box, one can see how much easier it would be to fledge. Just jump up on the rim of the nest...these little owls have only seen the outside through the door not a 360 view like nested owlets...don't get me wrong, the box is great but in nature it might be easier for them.They are right at the age to do it and instinct will take over the fear soon enough.
