Cat I just watched my cat bobbing her head before racing across the roomto pounce on a toy, and I'm realizing I'm seeing the sae behavior in the owlets. I'll bet Molly and McGee do the same kind of movement before they fly from a branch onto something moving. I think what they are doing is getting an exact distance

Any ideas whether I might be right?

Jan Hi everyone! I finally got some laundry done - not nearly enough, though. Just enough to let me think I got something accomplished!

A good morning to all from Purdy WA. Merlin is doing better today. His temp is down to 102.5 from 104. And he is eating and keeping it down. Of course, after boiled chicken and rice, he won't touch his regular dog food! So far so good. Thanks to all for their concern. I too amremembering the police, and all we lost last year. I still have a blue banner tied to my front porch. Amglad no one left the box last night! Don't want them to leave just yet!! Hope everyone has a good

Can someone explain to me what the e-book about the owlets will contain (obviously about the owlets, but how long, spanning their whole life, etc?) Also will it be made available in DVD format? Will there be a print copy book coming out about the owlets. I would love to be able to see the various stages and events all in one place with the ability to go back and look at them with leisure. I am always frustrated if I go off the live cam to read "in the basement" or check out other sites or background info only to find I have missed somehing on live cam!                           For the sheer satisfaction of seeing what good software can do for an aging system, I'd recommend going through the fixes (most of that number will be remedied very, very quickly, with just a couple mouse clicks) then go out and buy a new pc too! You'll have a ready-made NASA type setup to view critter camera like a pro.

You're welcome.
BTW, the computer I read and post and watch all the cameras with is now over 7 years old.

Perhaps you can continue our tutorials during our 12 step meetings or Owlcoholics Anonymouse?

Not ancient, but pretty old for this type of multiple video torture. It's been a good one.

If I recall correctly mine is 9 years old possibly 10 or 11 I just don't remember when I got it.

Out of curiosity, are you running 2 instances of this page, one on each side of the screen?

I was just about to ask if you were still here. Glad you got it fixed.

ok I am going to fix some rattachino and i will be right back

                                  Morning everyone! I've been out gardening (10 more bags of mulch brings the total to 62) and just came in for a quick break. I suppose that means I'll be here for 30 mins at least! LOL Once you start, you just can't stop.
                                  Hey, for that lunch you're talking about with the burger and Merritt's special cane syrup beans, I'll bring the Lemon Ice Brownies and a pitcher of mojitos.

Love the colours on their wings up close tho'. They are really beautiful creatures. I had screech owls

Good beautiful morning MODS and owlets. Seems food deliveries are getting later and later now. I was lucky to see first delivery last night so I knew all would be well and safe to go to bed. Can't stay on long today as I am going to a fireman appreciation day in town. I will be doing face painting on little owlets (kids) which is always found. Will try to talk some of them into an owl on their faces or arms.
Will check back in when I get home and naturally again tonight.
I predict the first real step out of the box will be tomorrow night.

Yes they probably will. The fledging process will last until they are 80 days old or so. M&M will continue to provide for themwhile they are learning to fly and to burnt.

When they start to fledge, will they still go back in the box to sleep during the day for awhile?

Giving those wings a taste of the night air! Surely it won't be much longer now.

                           We keep waiting for Max to make the first move. Fledging begins between day 50 and 60 in a barn owl's life, and Max is 55 today. Fledging is a month long process for barn owls. They will first step out and hop around, a stage that is called "branching," and then they will take short choppy flights progressing to longer and more graceful flights over time. Mid-June they will leave the nest to find homes of their own. M&M will continue to provide for them until they leave for good.

                            This makes sense to me from a biological/evolutionary standpoint. It's safer to go together and the parents can protect them better if they all go together. Those that do go together are more likely to reproduce and have children who do the same. Just my guess

Molly and McGee will probably keep using this nest site as long as they are alive. Their off spring will find homes of their own, but I don't know how far they will roam to find one. I don't think they keep in touch or if they will recognize each other. Those are good questions!

LOL! I've spent so long not doing stuff round the house that I'm having to be quite strict with myself now - and at least doing the ironing means I can still watch the owlets! Actually i've just found out that I don't have to work tomorrow either - if I'd known that before I started the ironing I probably wouldn't have done quite so much as I'm quite good at the 'It will wait till tomorrow' philosophy 😃

Good Saturday Morning everyone! The sun is out, I did get SOME sleep around 4.00a.m. GA time. Looks like the treats came in after I went to bad, count was 1 at that time. I know withholding will make the babies want and need to leave, it just is hard to watch the process at times. Last night all of us who were up, watched two babies at the time in the box door way. We held our breath wondering who was going to get pushed out. I love flying in small 4 seater planes but do not want to be pushed out of one. Good morning, Kay. I'm one of the ones who doesn't think food is being withheld, and that Max will step out when he's good and ready, food or no food

Morning all. I amback to viewing. We had to postpone our trip and can I say although yesterday was a bit of a wasted day. Driving around for 6 hours for as my dd said "nothing!" I am glad I am able to watch the owls 😃 Oh and I think my hubby is hooked he fell asleep in my office watching the owls. But it's also a bit of a pain as he has taken over my spot at my desk. 😃 I need a new computer so this may be reason enough to head over to Tiger today and get it. Because he

                           Hi Stacy. They usually eat the smaller rodents whole, but they tend to share the rabbits still. We have seen an owlet swallow a whole gopher, for instance, several times, and mice are like an appetizer. They down those in an instant! If they are full enough, they will share anything, not matter what Folks - this moring 4:09 EST time, two deliveries, and Max & Pattison were sitting at door being called out - I think. Max watched his footing very carefully but honestly stepped out but wings still in. It was wonderful to watch-----tonight might be the night.

Anyone know what determines if they rip the prey apart or swallow it whole?

The only thing I ve observed is that when theres a drop off and theyre all trying to get hold it it, the one who has it will swallow it whole just so the others dont get it I think. Perhaps when theyre full they can take their time over it a bit more. Possibly depends on the size as well, but they have eaten rabbits same things happens to me, I practically fall off the chair. I've turned my sound down a bit but the same things happens

(to quote Carlos) 😃 😊

I suspect that adult owls mostly devour theiry prey whole. That's what Molly was doing before the owlets hatched. (At least we saw her snarf down one rabbit whole--there's footage of it if you check the Molly page.) When the owlets hatched, she started tearing the prey apart in to tiny filaments for her babies. Then the babies ate larger and larger chunks of rodent (I know, sounds delicious 🐸 as they grew. As soon as Molly saw that little Wesley could eat a whole mouse whole (!) that was the day she spent the first entire day out of the owl box. These are just my observations. I"mnot an owl expert whole I believe. Might be worth asking a bit later when the others come on.

           LOL! I stayed up just for you on this one! Wanted to see what you would say....and then I wasn't sure it was even you I had that SNL skit with...that's how tired I am. zzzzzzZONK!
            Yep. No coffee here. Never liked it. Everyone in my family EXCEPT me drinks it. I stick to juice, hot chocolate, or chait ea lattes (Starbucks - my fave).
            I can do the occasional mocha frappe (iced and chilled) - but that's about as far as I go. Uno soda in the AM for me though.
            I wouldn't mind being your sister \stackrel{\textcircled{\colored}}{=}

Here's the foot out coming out the door (not great, but best I could manage!):

The owl chat /watch has been really good tonight too! Many things to see in the basement. OWLso, a couple of the owlettes have almost stepped out! At one point, one of them put their foot out and kind of slipped. And several instances where they had their talons curled around the ledge! This is only the 2 treat they've had.... momand pop holding off longer and longer it seems. Encouragement me thinks! Glad you're here! Today, 00:43:55 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by MacColleen

Good night all. I'm giving up fledge-watch for tonight.
I think the only way anyone's coming out is if this happens...

Good night James. I just checked in and it looks like another late start for tonight. Wishing there truly was a big red button on the computer to alert us.
Good Night!

Why did the chicken cross the threshold?

Because his brother pushed him

G'nite James.

Sorry if this boggs down the flow of the chat but I'm reposting frombelow as it erased a line I wrote in response to Teneal.

I think this should remain the theme song for fledgers and watchers alke...

Am I imagining it ... or did I just see Max cough up a pellet onto the ledge ... ? Did anybody see that? When did he eat last?

Yesterday, 23:49:04 - Flag - Like - Reply

That's what it was?! I saw it, the tail end of it. So to speak.

Hello fellow night owls,

I vote to name the pellet "Peleton"

Max yaks a pellet
Cover the porch with rat fur
Better to step on

Okay, so I couldn't fit in the bed with the cats. So I played with this pic, pls don't laugh, LOL. I just thought Carlos the owl could give themsome encouragement. I blame all of you for getting me started doing this.
