Oh and hello and good day my fellow MODs! I was reading in the basement. Was privileged to see them "step out" last night.

Stephanie Lbby and your dear daughter, if you are there, I just read your post. I posted a message for you down way far below, now "in the basement" 😊
And here's a photo for your daughter of a screech owl who flew into our dining room window this January, was a bit stunned but recovered. We had heard them around here but had never seen them. What a beautiful bird. Have a good day 😊

Smurf pellets. Used to remind everyone that posts can be 'flagged' so the moderator will look at them. Usually ends up in flagged posts being removed and in extreme cases the blocking of some computer sites so they can't post any more.

Smurf is just another term for troll, spammer, troublemaker.

On the website (wiki) that this group has set up, we have PDFs of the chat so that people can look it for days or periods they missed. It also allows for collection of poetry and links that folks share. It is often easier to read the PDF than to try to go to the bottom of the screen and click more to go back in time through the chat thread. That only works up to a certain point before your computer will hang. So, if you are interested, you can go to the wiki at <http://milyowlshworks.com> and look around. The link to "Chat StreamPDFs" is right there on the front page. There are also photos, facts, poetry, etc. on the wiki. Anyone can view the wiki and you do not need to join or gain access to look. ☺

 Seems so strange that it would be more comfortable for them to be standing on ONE leg instead of 2! I would think it would be hard to have to hold that leg up????? Wonder what the reason is for this?
 Boy, they have to be HUNGRY today. Seeing as they don't share the food, then 2 of them got nothing last night. Quite a change from getting 2 or 3 treats per night. Sure like to know why McGee never showed last night!! Do you think he thinks it's time for the owlets to "go fetch"????

 Birds often sleep on one leg. They lock their knees when they sleep like horses and I "liken" sleeping on one leg to US crossing our legs when we sit...its comfortable!

 Ooops typed and accidently hit delete..... Anyway, birds often sleep standing up, they lock their knees like horses do. And they often sleep on one leg. It is thought to be a way to stay warm, but seeing as these are California Birds, I liken "one legged sleep" to US crossing our legs when we sit down, its just comfortable

 I believe when birds pull up one leg, an involuntary nerve "damps and locks" the other leg/foot so to speak. Usually clamps around a perch. This is what allows them to sleep standing up without falling over. Birds that are relaxed and resting pull up one leg, often accompanied by the head swiveled back and beak tucked under the wing.

 There has been a lot of discussion about this, with no absolute conclusion. I think most people think that Max is Maxine, and wondering about Patison, but it's still a bit early to tell. I think one person cited an article that stated that it's not easy to sex them before one year of age. So, we may never know for sure. Clear as mud?

As cruel as it may seem, it really just prepares them for real life outside the box. There will be days when their hunting leads to naught, and they will be fine. I, personally, would like to go do a little mousin' myself and bring them a snack, but I do trust that Molly and McGee have shown themselves to be such good parents that nothing has gone awry. QUESTION Do mature owls hear as well as they see or vice versa? I know they turn their heads for all around seeing but was wondering about their hearing. And where are the "ears"?
Today, 08:13:35 - Flag - Like - Reply

They have extraordinary hearing. One ear is slightly higher than the other too which helps them zero in on exactly where the sound is coming from. Cool, huh?

Mature owls hear even better than they can see. Studies have proven that they can hunt in complete darkness by hearing alone. Their ears are on either side of their face, but you can't see them because they are covered by feathers. The ears are asymmetrical - one is higher than the other; they are really huge openings. The facial disks of feathers around their eyes direct sound into the ear openings, and the asymmetry of the ears allows them to pinpoint their prey's movements by a triangulating process.

It was a pretty exciting weekend and you should take the time to read the notes and see the pictures, but the short version is this: All owlets are in the box and well. Max and Patti both have spent time on the perch outside the box, then go back in.
Molly and McGee didn't bring much food last night and the speculation is that they are now trying to get them more interested in hunting their own food.

Dear Stephanie, I am just reading this now after being "in the basement" reading the older posts after signing on. Please know I am thinking about your little daughter (and you too!) and sending prayers and good wishes. My husband was diagnosed 12 years ago with leukemia, (CML), had bone marrow transplant from his sister and is doing very well thank God today! He was in reverse isolation for 2 months so I can imagine how difficult hospitalization can be, so it's great she has the diversion of the owls! Say hello from all of us and give her a hug! 😊

Good morning last night was sure exciting. Seeing both Max and Pattison out on the perch and exercising their beautiful wings was great (nerve racking but great) Only two treats last night has me a little concerned and no visits from McGee is kind of odd. I hope McGee is alright and that he will show up tonight with good chow for his hungry little owlets. We've come so far and I sure don't want anything bad to happen now. The weather has changed again just when it was so great so maybe that is what the problem was though it never stopped the hunters in the past.

That was my concern too. I'm hoping Magee is ok and maybe this is normal... to let the owlettes go a little hungry so they will come out of the box and try hunting on their own. Noticed, only 2 treats were brought last night... perhaps intended for the 2 youngest owlettes?

Just this as I'm at work and taking a nano sec break: I saw the first one come out last night. While that one was out, an owl landed on the top of the box for a brief moment b4 taking off. I know at least one other viewer commented on that. Could that have been McGee? Remember when Wesley swallowed his first meal & Molly left the nest day? If that was McGee, maybe seeing the owl out was his cue to take a break, let them begin their own hunt? I won't be able to check back until this eve.

Good morning from NYC. Stayed up til 1:00 AM watching our babies (not really anymore) perch outside...so exciting. Don't know what to think about the treat "thing" and McGeel Like Carlos says, we will just have to wait and see what happens

I think we all neglect Austin a little bit. Wesley is "the baby". Max and Pattison seem almost like a team, and are very close in age. So Austin is just the other one. Does this happen a lot to the next-to-last child in a big family?

Pattison stepped out on the perch last night! Max went first shortly after sundown, stretched his wings, flapped them mightily, and just sat outside a while. He went back in and Patison came out. Pattison sat upon the perch and also stretched his wings. Pattison also tried out another place to perch but found it to be precarious! He stepped onto the left side of the porch and almost lost his balance. He fluttered his wings to keep from falling and successfully returned to the inside of the box. A collective sigh of relief was had by all.

The behavior of the owlets triggers dramatic changes in behavior by the parents, I think. Remember, as soon as Wes swallowed his/her first mouse Molly started staying away from the box during the day. Now we've seen the 2 oldest step out of the box and the delivered food sharply drops off. They are no longer rapidly growing owlets. They are full-sized owls and don't need nearly as much food as they did when they were visibly changing every day.
So, this is probably a normal development. But even if it's not one night with very little food, they can survive this and be fine. I'm sure they are many times in the wild when an owl goes hungry for a night due to weather or other circumstances.

1. It is raining in San Marcos. That makes hunting more difficult because barn owl feathers are not water proof. Yes, M&M can fly in the rain, Moly just paid a visit, we have seen her very wet before, and McGee has sat on owl box in the rain, but still, the fact remains.
2. Critters might not be out as much because of the rain.
3. The slurping noise keeps up from dusk to dawn, all night long, every night, food or no food. It is not a distress call. It is normal.
4. The owlets are about to fledge and still need as much food as they can get. Learning to fly is hard work. M&M would not deprive them of food during this phase of their life. It's just an off night.

Carlos has said that the treats would slow up to encourage the owlets to perch, fledge, and eventually be on their own. The sound we hear has been described as a "sipping" noise. It gets extremely loud when M & M show up, with or without food. It's interesting that we women are concerned about their going hungry...it must be the mom in us! 😊.....oh yeah, good a.m. from Michigan..another sunny, beautiful Spring day....

I hope there was lots of food left in the pantry. There are 4 babies. Since they often eat their food whole that means 2 will go hungry. I would feel better if 2 more treats would come in before dawn.

The only thing I have seen them eat whole is a mouse, the rest of the "dinners" are partially eaten before swallowing the last of the carcass whole. They have been sharing food so I see no reason to assume that didn't happen today.

I do not believe Mom and Dad want any of their babies hungry. Their wings get wet and they can't fly, rodents stay hidden under logs to stay dry. Weather affects lots of things. My guess is Mom and Dad haven't eaten well tonight either. 😊

Is that their typical noise - it is from inhaling?? Aren't sounds typically from exhaling?
Today, 05:02:11 - Flag - Like - Reply

Barb
It is a typical noise and they make it all night long as a reminder to the parents to bring food. I don't know if it's inhaling or not but I do know it's normal and not an indication of hunger (they will stop shortly when the sun rises)

I will be watching as often as possible to the end of transmission. A bientot.

Annemarie, maybe you'll enjoy this and can contribute a good wiki-worthy story to go along with the image. I fizzed out after the conceptualization stage. (posted earlier today, also)

I originally posted it as a way for us to write a group-effort piece of fiction. I was thinking along the lines of cheesy Noir, others were a little less focused on a theme.

Feel free to save it, manipulate it, share it, write your own little story and repost it later, whatever you like.

Mine starts out:

A dark and stormy night in a city that knows how to keep its secrets, but one owl is still trying to find the answers to life's persistent questions....Owl Noir, Private Eye. (with apobgies to Garrison Keillor)

"Hello, Handsome." Her soft rasp tugged on my heart-strings.
At the window, the rain drummed a counterpoint to my throbbing pulse.
In a voice I did not recognize as my own, I choked out "Won't you come in?"
I slyly slid yesterday's liverwurst and onion sandwich into the trash.

A new, smaller, window should pop up asking you to enter your FB information. If you don't see it after a couple seconds, minimize the main browser window. The pop-up window sometimes hides behind the main window. Once you are logged in your FB profile photo should appear beside your posts.

Assuming a lot of people are going to be here tonight to see our new fledger, it might slow things down to have two windows open to follow both video and chat. May I please make a suggestion? In the window you are following chat, pause the video to save bandwidth. That may help things to run a little smoother for everyone.

The large screen is ahead of the smaller one due to the way the smaller one is broadcast. It's actually sent to ustream, back to Carlos, displayed on his laptop monitor, then sent back to ustream again, and finally to you. Quite incredible to think that's all the lag that's in a 4 way round trip across the internet!
