While they're taking I will share with all my furry friend lovers friends our latest discovery. My husband and his son were working in the garage and Steve Jr. found a box that was stuck behind a ladder with a nest inside. I think it belongs to a sparrow because we have seen one flying in and out. No eggs or babies but we left it in case we are blessed with new arrivals. I will keep you posted.

Thanks for the link to the video, Merritt. After viewing and thinking about these past exciting days, I realize now that their instincts and intelligence are stronger than I ever expected. They don't need their parents to actively teach them how to fly - just seeing their parents flying is enough. They flap their wings instinctively, without thinking; the intelligence comes in when they try to mimic the parent. One process leads the other on in a closed loop of increasing dexterity. Utterly fascinating!!

Well, I think they still do need to practice, unlike the smaller birds who just fly away the first time they try. These bigger birds need to practice and work out the balance thing hence all that flapping for a few weeks. But doing that is still instinctual. 😊

I guess last night put everybody's worries (if you were worried) about McGee - I still get reminded that this has been going on forever and it is amazing how they instinctively know what to do - I think the best part for me last night was seeing Moly and McGee flying around and hearing their chirping to the owlets - only they know what that meant. Good morning all from Purdy WA. Chilly and raining here. Merlin is doing a little better today. I put him on Prednisone yesterday, and it seems to help his appetite. I got him to eat last night, and he kept it down. No tests results yet. I saw the video of the roof walker! I was laughing so hard when s/he was trying to put a foot back down on the perch! Carlos needs to put a little ladder there for them! Hope everyone has a good day!

Glad to hear Merlin is feeling better. Hope the prednisone helps. It will boost the appetite. My dog produces too much steroid (prednisone is one) so we have to put her on drugs to bring down her production, but we have pred for when it goes to far the other way, so I am familiar with its effects. It's amazing what they can do these days. 😊

Hi Becky... Glad to hear Merlin is doing better...

Chris... does your dog have Cushings' Disease? My beagle has it and we tried Lysodren (Mitotane) and he didn't tolerate it well. We are going to try another drug which I can't remember now once he is symptomatic again. Tough to have an already food obsessed beagle who now wants to eat and drink even more.

Chris in Olympia, WA

Yes, Cushings. We have tried Lysodren for over a year and couldn't get it controlled. Could get her obese but couldn't keep her there. Now we have switched to Tribastene. So far so good. Having an ACTH Friday and we'll see how to adjust dosage. Good luck with your beagle.

It's nice to be on in the morning (PDT) and see some familiar faces! I was having withdrawals being in the office yesterday. Another nice thing about WFH is being able to work in my bathrobe, LOL! Glad I don't have a webcam on me. 😊

I just watched the video of the owl getting down, and I think I am glad I missed that last night. I would have woken up the entire house, if not the entire neighborhood!

Sorry, Merritt, I did it again - that darned "delete" feature - so here goes again.

A hint for those who don't have time to view all the links and pictures and "helpful hints" posted here in the chat: As I scroll down through the "chat" I highlight, copy and paste anything I want to save into a Word document. From the Word document you can put your cursor on the link you want to view - then CTRL and click to open that link. I save everything to the same document - just open it and add whatever you want to save. My document is now several pages long and it's messy because I sometimes save the whole post and sometimes just the link. There are probably easier and more efficient ways of doing this - but it works for me.

Merritt says it works for her, too!!

But there are a few posts, links, helpful hints and answers and pictures (like the "right sign off" pictures posted earlier today) that I like to save for a while to go back to later in the day. Besides - I may want to use some of the siller pictures to come back to haunt someone with later 😊 😊

Good afternoon MODS. It's 12:03 here in Madson, OH. I did get to see the first step out last nite, very exciting. As you can see daytime noise does not interfere with "roosting" They are approaching adulthood and so the "nightlife" is going to be their favorite time of the day. Sorry to say that use to be mine too, but at 64 anytime to be UP is good. Have to go get some housework and laundry done, it's been on hold since March---not really but seems like it. Later all.

-Does Carlos know who was really outside so much last night? Seems a little strange that it would not be Max--he surely needs the practice and should be the most adventuresome of the bunch. But, maybe not. I hoped Carlos would be able to tell from his pictures because they are so much clearer.

Merritt, how are you managing with all this sleep you are getting now? It still seems like you aren't getting lots of sleep, just more than you were. I still feel like I'm running on empty every day with only 5-6 hours sleep. Somewhat normal for this past year due to daughter's school schedule and other things, but the owls just make it even harder to get to bed at a reasonable time.

I gotta go soon to take my dog to get her stitches taken out. Hope to be back by the time of the live chat. 😊

The six hours I've been getting the last four nights have been wonderfully deep and peaceful. I'm back to get ting up with my DH to make our coffee and see him on his way as I have always done, and it is a little hard to do that having stayed up past midnight, but the absolute insomnia I had where I simply did not feel sleep at all even though I was dog-tired is gone. I'm actually feeling pretty well rested.

See you later, Chris. I'll look for your return.

Hi MODs. For those who were watching the wood duck box site (and all interested), I contacted the sawwhet yesterday, and it was confirmed that there will be video of the fledging, from OUTSIDE the box available in a couple days. It should be posted on the wood duck site of sportsmansparadise.com. If I would here anything different I will post. Since we will be gone for three days (leaving in a couple minutes) you all may see it before I do. I feel terrible that I will probably miss Max and Pattison fledgings while I am gone. "Be still my heart"!! But thank goodness, some of you wonderful folks will have captured the events on pics. Happy fledge watching 😊 😊 😊

When this old box starts cramping my style
And fuzzy owl butts are just too much for me to face
I fly way up to the top of the roof
And all my cares just drift right into space
On the roof, it's peaceful as can be
And there the world below can't bother me
Let me tell you now...

Elaine - you are SO right!! I go to Yellowstone every year, and what I've learned is to get away from the people and hike though the back areas. You don't have to go far to be alone, and the things you see if you slow down are amazing! Things like knowing that you are being watched, and looking over to see a herd of elk with their young resting silently in the woods, or moose walking slowly out of the willows. It's magical, and life-affirming - but only if you take the time to see and feel it. Which is what this wonderful site has done for all of us!

If you live near owls be sure to bring your cats in at night. We had a great morning owl living in our area for a few years and it wiped out the squirrel and rabbit population. Plus I had three cats mysteriously disappear and they were big cats. I can tell we don't have any owls in our area right now because I am overrun with squirrels and rabbits... also some feral cats. I need some more owls to keep our woods/fields in balance.

I've enjoyed watching these guys grow up.

Husbands family had a farm, and the barn kitties never lasted very long if they were born during the time the owls were feeding their young. The farmers tend to like the owls, though. Keeps the vermin population down, so it's kind of give and take. People who farm have a very different take on animals - they truly love them, but they seem to be more attuned to the natural cycle of things. A bit of a stereotype, but I think you know what I mean.

LOL...Nooo. I love Great Danes...(actually all doggies and kit ties too.) I am actually wondering if they ever catch small cats, but that might be dangerous for the owls with those kitty claws...

Hate to break this to you, Vicky, but owls do hunt small dogs and cats 😊 Husbands family had a farm, and the barn kitties never lasted very long if they were born during the time the owls were feeding their young. The farmers tend to like the owls, though. Keeps the vixen population down, so it's kind of give and take. People who farm have a very different take on animals - they truly love them, but they seem to be more attuned to the natural cycle of things. A bit of a stereotype, but I think you know what I mean.

Good morning! I was so happy to see more treats delivered last night than the night before, Whew! had e worried a bit. It was really exciting watching last night and Molly's attempt with her clicking noses to get the babies to come farther out. Flybys were great too. I would of loved seeing Max fly up to the roof and might still get to see a video of it sometime today if it gets posted.

The following night's should get more and more exciting as the little ones get braver and braver to come out of the box and follow Max's lead. This is so exciting to see how our babies mature into mature owls.

Oh happy day 😊

I hadn't had that tune in mind in a long, long time. When I was a little kid (7-8 years old), I used to sneak out of the house early on Saturday mornings before my mother had a chance to catch me to do chores (I was 1 of 8 children, and Saturday was chore day!) I'd walk down the street, headed for the woods a few blocks away, and I'd sing that song to myself, over and over. I had first heard it at the theater, the Uncle Remus movie. Thanks for the memory, Nature Lover! 😊

Time for the daily summary of the night's events, to be collected by our friend Latrippi and included in the Moly wiki created by some wonderful volunteers from his chat room. To catch up on past events, be sure to check this out!

Owlets went exploring last night! Max and Pattison sat on the perch, the fledgling ledge, and even the roof! Positive identity could not be made in all cases, but no sign yet of Austin stepping out. All owlets are safely in the box this morning. No mishaps occurred in the night.

Thankfully they don't have a good sense of smell! Most raptors or any animal that eats raw meat usually has a poor sense of smell. They couldn't eat it otherwise. 😊
Today, 05:55:19 - Flag - Like - Reply

Cat
Sure they could. What smells bad to us is just a function of how our senses are wired to our brain - to a place in the brain that either says "yum" or "uck" or something in between. There's no reason why an owl with keen smell wouldn't be wired to have that smell go to the "yum" interpretation.
Today, 05:59:24 - Flag - Like - Reply

Cat
Our sense of "yuck" and "yum" evolved (so they say) for survival. Those humans/monkeys/whatever who were wired to smell rancid meat as "yum" generally did not have a long life span and did not have children. Those who were wired to hate the smell or taste of rancid meat lived a lot longer. Same with owls. I'm sure, to some degree, but in different way. Basically, I'm saying that assuming all creatures are wired just like us is probably a risky assumption.

a big barrel that catches rain water from the gutters - Usually ends up quite full during our summers in the UK - but on the other hand if we don't have rain for a week then we end up with a hosepipe ban so it becomes very very useful! (OK thats a slight exaggeration but it does feel like we can't cope with any sort of weather here at times LOL!)

Good morning everyone. Got up at 4:00 A.M. to see my husband off to work and I normally go back to bed! But, since we had a "roofer"... I had to stay and watch! Looked like he/she was enjoying the view 15 feet up! But glad he/she made it safely back inside 😊

Morning Everyone!! Just come back from taking one of my sons to the hospital to have the cast taken of f his foot. Looks like I just missed all the excitement - knew I should have logged on straight away and not put a load of washing on first!!! Stupid housework LOL!

Good pictures Tiffany and TByrd. Wish I could figure out how to do that. I just can't seem to copy the pictures.

Owosaurus
George, have you tried the "Prt Scr key, then paste into Paint, then save the image" method? When you click on Prt Scr nothing appears to have happened but you have captured what ever is on your screen. On some older keyboards you need to hold down the CTRL key while you hit Prt Scr.

Nancy
Look on your start menu and see if you have a "snipping tool" I think Vista and Windows 7 has it

Nicole Gilbert Racicot
I just came back to look and saw that your posts says that Max made it back I'mso HAPPY. Next time should be a breeze

Barbara
We're so proud of that owl that ventured up on high
'Wont be long until that leap that takes you up to the sky
For now the lure of rabbit will bring him/her safely home
Well done Max - what a relief! -though we love to see you roam.

Max: Oh my gosh guys... you have no idea what's out there. You're just babes and can't imagine.
Wes: Tell us, tell us!
Austin: Was it hard?
Patti: Oh, shut up! You are such a show off!

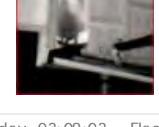

And now that I'm giving voice to the owls, I think it's a pretty good clue. Time to go. Adios!

Owosaurus

You always have to make that first trip to the bottom before you ever learn how to get yourself back up. I suspect he will probably figure out shortly that the platform and perch are worth investigating. He appears to just be taking it all in at the moment. I'm signing off the chat, and will probably fall asleep soon. If anyone would be kind enough to copy the photo I posted earlier to share with some of the other not-so-early birds a little later, I'd appreciate it.

More pleasing mental image to go with "owllet speak":

Endlessly blowing up balloon bouquets which have to be transported to the door (without hitting Bolty) and released.

I prefer the sucking helium out of party-balloon perversion, myself. And that sound always makes me laugh.

If you are still around I posted some skydiving links below, which may or may not interest you. I don't know how familiar you were with the people in the sport in that timeframe... Many tributes from some of the best at that time. (Well I am in there somewhere but not very notable...)

Thanks for the links, Kathryn. I never knew Gus but I believe everyone knew of him. At least anyone who followed the sport. One thing I learned early from fellow jumpers is that you meet a whole lot of people in the sport, and attend way too many memorials. But I've never attended one where the spirit was sad, and I think that's how it should be. Blue Skies....

Here is one for a former friend and the comforting voice on radio instruction for my first 5 solos.

Hoo Boy. Been a strange night. Spent quite a bit of time on the phone with my best friend who has cancer, arranging for housekeeping services for her, after a day at work organizing a care basket too for her all the while trying to actually do my job. Then I found out after I got home one of my online friends from another chat room I have been a member of for three years died of cancer last week.

OK, enough of that! Having the owls to watch and cheer on and having all these great folks here have given me some sanity, and I thank you for that! (((HUGS)))

I think we ALL have moments in life when we almost fall off our "ledge" (and some may be steeper than others), and we do everything to keep our wings flapping to keep us from falling. And it's comforting to know that we have others willing in the wings to help us through those times. And we all have our "Mollys and McGees" silently encouraging us on, keeping watch over us. 😊
I'm glad you have found solace in this place and amongst these people 😊 in your time on the "ledge".

I am right behind you. It is so quiet that I am falling asleep at the computer. It was a good night for owl watching after being gone for almost one week & not having any computer or internet access. 😊 Thanks to all who posted great photo captures. Good night...

I have a tip if you want to save hard drive space. Crop the white space of your canvas to around the photos. Like on that first one you could save at least half the amount of the actual pixel size saved.
