Just checking in for a quick look. I can't help but think of Lily the bear (Ely, M) and her cub. Hope, that I followed online earlier this year. When they both finally left the den for good, people (me included) would come back to the webcam for days and days afterward, hoping they would come back. I'm afraid that's what will happen here too. A wistful glad / sad feeling. "See" you later tonight! Too few nights to come.

I can't get this to post in one piece, so maybe one verse at a time. Nickel Creek - When you come Back Down:

You've got to leave me now, you've got to go alone
You've got to chase a dream, one that's all your own
Before it slips away
When you're flying high, take my heart along
I'll be the harmony to every lonely song
That you learn to play.
When you're soaring though the air, I'll be your solid ground
Take every chance you dare, I'll still be there, when you come back down.

I'll keep looking up awaiting your return
My greatest fear is that you will crash and burn
And I won't feel your fire
I'll be on the other end that always holds the line
Connecting in between your sweet heart and mine
I'm strung out on that wire
I'll be on the other end to hear you when you call
Angel you were meant to fly, if you get too high
I'll catch you when you fall

Hi Becky. I saw that clip on Molly a few weeks back and it got a bit of notice that night on the Ustream chat. There's another clear view of it one of Carlos's picture from the night it first appeared. Today, though, I thought I saw something similar on one of the wings of Max or Pat. Here is the San Marcos Royals, a gang of tougher looking characters your eyes have never seen before. This group led my gang Chief, McGee and his partner, gang mol known as Molly has been reportedly preying on local residents of San Marcos every night now for the past few weeks. The word on the streets, allies and fields is that they are raising their kids to be just like them-terrors of the night. Despite being show cased on T.V., Newspapers and radio, this gang has not yet been apprehended. So be forewarned citizens of San Marcos, don't go out at night unless you really have to. And when you do go out be especially vigilant because authorities on gangs say that things are likely to get worse.

I haven't been watching the chat on here this afternoon, so please forgive me if anyone else has posted on this. I noticed, after looking at Molly's blog from last night, that one of the owls landing on the porch had a feather that had been 'clipped'. Does anybody know which one it is? It was a feather on the right wing, and it appears to have been broken off. Once again, please forgive me if this has come up before, as I haven't really been watching the chat very much. Also, I wanted to post a 'crop' of one of the pictures on Molly's blog... had to love it!!

LOL, thanks. I found a new method for these through trial and error.
And now I'm kind of stuck in a rut, trying to perfect it. It would be a LOT easier if I had larger files to work with.
These tiny jpgs are murder to tame.

Very nice, James. I get larger pics/files by converting the resolution to 300 in Photoshop. It makes the image a lot easier to manipulate. I use the bicubic choice to get the best results. Not as good as an original higher res, but still much better than it was.

Thanks, Robin. I've completely abandoned PS for little stuff like this.
I'm not sizing up anything just because the jpg artifacts are already in the screenshots.
But I have been playing with some free editors and having a ball, as is apparent.
My days of PS ended the day I installed Lightroom. It is so much more in tune with my line of thinking. 😊

Gotcha. I use Photoshop for a lot of artwork because I have so many layers. I love it, but it takes a bit of time. I love some of the newer (often free) editors that are out, too.

No one has brought back any food but, one of them was on the perch last night when a delivery was made. They reached around and took it right out of the parent's beak, then sat there for a few minutes trying to decide how to handle the situation, with the rodent dangling from their beak the whole time. They eventually went inside to consume it. They passed the first test for eating outside - don't drop it!

The difference in screen "darkness" is unavoidable. Caribs is using a security camera as OB2 (the smaller, duller video) so he is unable to get the images to match any better than they do. It's normal, although unfortunate.

My husband does the same thing. Our PC is in a nook in an open upstairs hallway. His laptop is downstairs in the den. I can see him every now and then checking in to see what's up with the owl, but he could NEVER be as addicted as I am. He can't understand why I try to get by on 4 hrs. of sleep at night just to watch it. (We're on the East Coast - so all the excitement on the West Coast doesn't start here until VERY late) hi, I have been watching the owls and wondering about the lights at night. at first I thought that it was just a sensitive camera but now realize (seeing outside shadows) there are lights on. does this negatively affect them? after all, they are owls who hunt in the dark.

thanks, connie
Today, 15:00:07 - Flag - Like - Reply

James Hill (in Exile)
The lighting and the cameras are both infrared. There is no "visible light" which can be seen by almost anything but an infrared camera. It is however a source of light, so it will still throw shadows. The owls likely don't even know it's there unless there is some new research that I've never heard about.

As for the camera flashes - The IR video camera is VERY sensitive to both the normal and the IR light emitted by the flash, so any flashes appear much brighter to us than they actually are. Google "IR lights and cameras" for some great explanations/examples.

I'm no expert by far, but I do remember Webster describing "ledge" as preparing for flight or the growth of feathers. I did not find "branching" in the book at that time. Someone else on here probably has a better answer.

Carbs may have said that - I think I read it in Stacy's bbg, but I don't know if she specifically hear him say that boots - it probably wouldn't be in the dictionary. I think it's a new term to us, but has been used by owl people in Great Britain since owls go through a process different than fledging.

Branching has been used for years in the US as well. It is primarily used in conjunction with owl and hawks as the young leave the nest and move from branch to branch exercising their wings and building their breast muscles up to a point where flight is possible.

James Hill or Chris in Olympia, are you there? I had a quick question. OK, two. I'm assuming the chat PDF's are in the time zone of the person who PDF'd them, so is there a way to tell who did the PDF? That way I can determine what time something has been posted in my time zone. Chris, I know your time zone is PDT, but what is your time zone James? If they are both PDT then it doesn't matter.

According to barn owl experts, the parents would never withhold feedings but they do teach them to hunt. Everything the owlets do is about instinct. They are such beautiful birds. I encourage people to visit the Barn Owl Trust. Stacey O'Brien has wonderful true scientific information too. It's fun to sort of humanize them and they sure do have personalities! I love how they play together. Apparently, they go their separate ways once they are able to hunt. Can you imagine if our kids grew up and "flew the nest" so quickly? I'd never adjust that quickly! LOL

I also enjoy how they often work on pulling down off of each other.

Merritt, I have so many more. Just grab the first that illustrated what we saw in the wee hours this morning, it was just after 5am EDT so that would be 2am PDT, still early yet for them. It was truly amazing to watch one of them take off flying. Carlos was having a field day with taking pics. It was almost hard to keep up with. Two of them have to be exhausted today, Carlos included!

Hey y'bw. I did some gardening this morning before it got too hot and now I am watering some really dry areas. I've been setting the timer on my oven to remind me when it's time to switch to a different station, and you would not believe how quickly 15 or 20 minutes can pass when you are here reading chat and watching these owls. Snap. It is gone just like that!

And before anybody horks on me, please let me say that we haven't run our sprinkler system at all this year. I know a bit of water gets evaporated when you run a sprinkler system in the day which is why during summer we only run it before dawn. I also know water is a precious resource, but Dallas has plenty of it now. Also, everyone here has grass. Xeriscaping is not yet popular here, and I do so love blooming flowers and lush suburbs.

No horking from me!! I don't even know what water conservation is where I live! I live on the peninsula, and have never watered since I bought this place 8 years ago! I have a creek on my property and lots of trees. Don't really do anything but have the lawns mowed. I leave most of it natural for the wild critters! My front lawn is always green because it is mostly moss! The bunnies like it, and my weeds, so I leave it as is!

We just de-winterized our sprinklers a few days ago. Unfortunately with only an average of about 10 inches of rain a year here, we do have to water in the summer. But there are restrictions, such as odd/even days, and from 4 am to 10 am, something like that. Ours is on a timer so I don't pay attention much anymore.

For those of you having a hard time telling the difference between Max & Pattison, take a close look at this photo. Max has more tawny (brownish) color under his chin area. Pattison is more white like McGee. Max has almost no tufts of fluff on his head, whereas Pattison has a few left. Austin, peeking out has a lot more. Hope this helps!

My sleep is so messed up again, Kathryn, i really do not see how yaLL do it, i woke up and saw the flying off the roof and then coming back miss landing on the perch underneath. It was a really something to watch, them take off and disappear, then one looked like he/she landed in the tree but apparently was on the litter and you kept seeing his head/wings PoP'Out on the right side of the camera, funny that the ones in the box ran screaming back in the box away from the door when the first one flew away, sorta' like the world just got upended for them, it was funny to watch their wee reactions. Amazing antics going on, watching them make mistakes and learn was truly PRICELESS!

I have had the same problem, but this is the rule I use:
If the noun is singular and ends in -s, add -'s

Example: Charles's bike has a flat tire.

Chickadee, would you say (and I'm spelling phonetically) "Carlos ow's" as opposed to "Carlos-ez ow's"? I would not. Nor would I say "Charles bike" as opposed to "Charles-ez bike". Therein lies the bias towards 's as the possessive.

And the Prince and Princess of Wales are known as the Waleses. So is their castle "The Waleses's castle"?

I would say Car-bze ow's. Not Carlos-ez. I wouldn't add an extra s in my pronunciation. That may be a regional difference. And The Waleses castle. Which would feel awkward to say. I don't know if you saw below, but I did give in and quote from the AP Style book.

William Strunk's Elements of Style recommends adding the 's. (In fact, oddly enough, it's Rule Number One in Strunk's ""Elementary Rules of Usage.")

To further confuse 😊, there is an exception to the rule Chris listed above (in adding 's to nouns ending in s to form singular possessive):

--use only an apostrophe when a singular noun ending in s is followed by a word beginning with s.

I have read (don't know where now) that these rules used to be much more strict but have loosened up over time. It used to be that the only name ending in "s" you could simply put an apostrophe after to make it possessive was Jesus, as in "Jesus' name". That is what you will find in older references.

However, once you have any exception, more are likely to be made. So I guess as long as we get the point across, we are fine. I just like to find a reason for my choice so I tend to look it up. Hope I didn't start an argument, just an interesting discussion. 😊

I would follow things to the letter of the law, but that's just in my nature. I do remember how one could just add an apostrophe in these circumstances, and it was all said and done. The formats/styles have changed over the years and it makes it all the more confusing for those who're used to writing a certain way. Used to drive me crazy in my college years when one professor required MLA format, and another APA. I do agree things have loosened up, especially as other means of communication have become the preferred methods. No stringent rules in email, chat and text please! 😊

Well, maybe it's easier to see that it really is as close as any perch from the video tour. But I got the impression, between the photos and the video tour, that the tree is very close. As close as the perch system.

That would be great, I haven't seen the video tour, and the tree, from photos, is still, seemingly somewhat removed with spindly branch tips (Mimosa I hear). So maybe it's a question of perspective. Something 'grippy' (like a trunk) leading directly to the box or platform would just be wonderful. With four of them coming out and flopping (blundering) around, there's potential for a real bumper car effect. BTW, thanks for conversing about it. 😊

If someone tied a little long log with rough bark to the upright holding the owl perch in front of the nest box, the owls could climb back up on that. Don't remember many little trees with rough bark in California (used to live in Dana Point).

Mary Carol, that is exactly right. Bark, astro-turf, carpet (as stupid as that sounds) would work. They need to develop foot and leg muscles to fine tune their landings. Climbing is a way that they do that.

Hi, Lee Anne,
I was having the same problem while back. I have Internet Explorer Version 7. In the bottom right hand corner of my screen, there is a small window above the time/date, that shows a number with % and also an icon that looks like a magnifying glass with a plus in the middle. To the right is a small arrow (actually looks like an upside down triangle). Click these and you can choose option for 125% or 150% that will clear the area to see the text in the blue box. Hope that works for you. It depends on which browser and version you have.

The video crashed while I was hitting "more" so you can see little frowny faces in the video spot, but the file is fine. Maybe your computer interprets that as a problem, but Google chrome lets you continue even if the video crashes. Do you have google chrome? Wonder if that makes a difference? Just a note for new posters here. We seem to have a lot on lately. If you click the "reply" button under a persons post, it keeps the conversation complete. Posting in a new post can get confusing, especially when there is a lot of posting happening. Also, go back to where you posted a question to look for replies instead of posting again. Most of us are reading in the basement and don't get back to top posts for a while. That also cuts down on a lot of unnecessary reading, and makes catching up so much easier. Thanks!!! 😊

I realize I should know this by now, but where is the best place to get a summary (preferably text/m photos, videos) of what happened after I go to bed each night (usually @ 10 or 11 p.m. PST). Thanks so much!

Barn owls don't actually build a nest - they find holes in trees or some other available location

We meet monthly and today I'm taking my Kitty Kat in his Pink SUV Stroller.

Both his mom and sister died this year so he gets the Pink SUV all by himself.

All three of them use to ride in it together. He's man enough to ride in it.

It also gets him out of the house on daily walks. I bought it with my first SS check.

A real treat for them. It's a beauty. Later

Barn owl tidbits - from wikipedia - possibly two broods!!! Well, maybe not cool enough weather in San Marcos.

An increase in rodent populations will usually soon cause the local Barn Owls to begin nesting; thus, even in the cooler parts of its range two broods are often raised each year.

The parents will continue to provision them for some 35-40 more days, until the young fledge. After honing their hunting skills in the presence of the parents for another week or so, the young leave the vicinity of the nesting area and seek out a territory of their own.

'Hoik' is the word used to describe what an owl does when it brings up an owl pellet - not sure it's an 'official' term but sums up the process quite nicely in my opinion!!!

Smurfs' are the irritating people that occasionally appear on here and just post to cause trouble - either posting over and over again or saying things that are inappropriate

'Avatar' is the little picture that appears next to your name when you post 😊

Mary Pat, you're right and that would work IF we had access to the HTML source code in this chat, but we don't. So, you can do that in the wiki but not in the comments here, as far as I know. Elliott, Chris, you're right that that behavior is set by default in the browser preferences but it can also be specified in the HTML code (not sure which gets priority in this case).

I am having trouble staying awake now as it is, but I am glad most folks saw the actual flights. Looks like Carlos took lots of photos (from the flashes) but they aren't up yet and I will probably take him a while as he is probably still sleeping after having been up all night.

Chris, I used the bit.ly service to mask the links, per HF's suggestion. (<http://bit.ly>) 😊

There is a Bit.ly Chrome extension that makes it a one click process

It worked but I still have my doubts if we repeat the same links several times. I think it will eventually catch up to us again. I'm still baffled how Merrit re-posts the same links over and over without raising flags. I attempted another one this morning and it flagged me with a link to the wiki PDF page. She re-posted the same link and it went through. [scratches head again]

I don't understand the bit.ly thing either. I think this goes beyond my pay grade. I could probably do it if someone walked me through it, but it is entirely new to me.

Since HF suggested bit.ly (he mentioned it to me also in an email and I didn't understand) shouldn't that still work without being flagged?

To make a hyperlink in your comment here:

- 1) Copy the url you need to your clipboard (right-click, copy link)
- 2) Type the url you want to link in you comment, select that text with the cursor
- 3) the "link" icon will become active and you can click it. (looks like a chain link, right beside the youtube icon)
- 4) Paste your url into the box that opens
- 5) Click "OK"
- 6) Wipe hand on pants, you're done.

OK - to answer my own question regarding why birds (not all) sleep on one leg - I did a bit of research and this seems to be the best answer --- Experts say a bird's leg gets three times more blood per heartbeat than the pectoral muscles used in flying, which are the largest muscles in his body. Consequently, he loses much more heat through his legs and feet than through his body. By standing on one leg, he can keep the other leg close to his body, inside feathers, and reduce heat loss.

Lani, also found this on a flamingo site: don't know if it applies to owl or not:

"Many animals, including dolphins and ducks, only turn off one side of their brain at a time when they sleep. Ducks have also been known to stand on one leg for long periods of time (along with herons, storks, and geese). If flamingos, too, keep half their brain awake while they sleep, that could explain why they sleep on one leg. The leg controlled by the side of the brain that's awake stays on the ground to maintain balance while the other leg and foot get to rest up for a while."

It does look weird! but apparently they are able to rearrange the feathers in their facial discs - I believe it is partly to aid hearing when they are hunting - I think that's right - hopefully someone will correct me if I'm wrong!

They standing on one leg is interesting. I have read that birds do it to keep warm but watching these guys - seems two legs would offer better overall balance for sleep - anyone know about this curiosity?
Today, 07:44:13 - Flag - Like - Reply

from what I understand - they will stand on one leg and use the other as a kind of seat under the body to rest on
Today, 07:53:57 - Flag - Like - Reply

Cheryl Owen
Apparently when they lift one leg up they can lock it and so make a kind of 'platform' to sit on - it is partly to keep the leg warm too as they have no feathers on their legs. Also the natural resting position for their feet is in the 'closed' position - which is why it's easy for them to hold onto trees - when they have their feet flat on the ground it is more effort for them - I guess a bit like if we were to hold our hands out with the fingers straight. (I'm no expert though, this is just what I've learned since being on here!)

Both spent some time out of camera view.
Carbs reported that they were on the fence, on the ladder, possibly on the kestrel box, and likely on the ground, too.
They were all over. Missed landings are normal and not likely to cause harm.

Good sunny morning

Terrific views last night. Our little owls are following the protocol of owls from years past. Flopping around and falling to the ground is normal and these babies don't have that far to fall. I have watched sever videos of baby owls learning to fledge and things are going like they should be.

BTW, James have you received the video of "Back Yard Barn Owls" yet? There is a lot of flopping on it as they learn to fledge. Very funny too.

 Yes, that was pretty funny. I guess high fives are pretty much out of the question for owls, huh. I also enjoyed the siblings' faces when Max/Pattil first left the perch...like, "Duuuuude!!!! You're way over theerrrrrr!!!!!"

Nicole, why would the people who were watching over night try to deliberately mislead you? Don't you think if an owl failed to return, there would have been a lot of comments about it? Please trust the people who spent so much time on here last night, who love these owls as much as you do, and who would never want to mislead you.

Good morning, Carolynn! I think everyone held their breath a time or two as the owlets began to test the newfound skills outside the box. The improvements Carlos made have come in handy: the extra perch and the platform. The perch on the ladder was used by them, too. Everytime they land on that, the camera shakes! They are getting around just fine, aren't they. It is exhilarating for us to see.

Time for the daily summary of the night's events, to be collected by our friend Latrippi and included in the Moly wiki created by some wonderful volunteers from his chat room. If you would like to add your favorite moment from the night to this summary, please feel free to reply below. The summary is posted at <http://mollyowl.rworks.com/TimeLine>. To catch up on past events, be sure to check this out!

Owlets continued to explore the world outside of the box last night, and one or more could be seen doing a happy dance up on the roof. Brief flights from landing spot to landing spot grew more graceful with each attempt. After enjoying life outdoors, all returned safely to the box, where they will sleep, eat, preen and play through another day.

GREETINGS from beautiful Iowa !
I will scroll down to see what all happened last night. I saw two babes on the roof. then one flapped off...another one trying to work up the nerve to step out. How precious. Why do I feel so proud? I had nothing to do with this 😊
