H MOD Friends, just now getting a chance to login. I find it amazing how animals have their own personality & characteristics as much as people do. Each of these owlets somehow look alike, but each is so unique it's comical. I love these babes and have taken on a special appreciation for owls. Without them we would be over run with rodents and like pests. Best rat & mice control ever, and no De-Con.

Barred owls often call and can be seen during the day, especially cloudy dark days. Barn owls are more nocturnal, I think.

I know, I feel the same way. We are humans, after all, and look at him with human eyes and all the emotions that we have. Nothing wrong in that, as long as we keep our perspective and realize that it's only our input, and not reflective of the actual event. We're smart - we can handle both views!

It is a dimorphic species wherein the sexes can be visually determined. The underside of the male's wings are white, while the female's are a creamy color with gray flecks. The body feathers of both male and female are gold with gray flecks. I also read that a male barn owl usually has all white pantaloons.

True for when they are adults, but these are juveniles. They will exhibit characteristics of both sexes until their first molt, so it's impossible to tell genders at this time.

And as juveniles, both male and female have spots. After their first molt, they start to resemble their adult coloration more.

Natalie Hi Elliott--just wanted to say thanks for your great description last night of what's been going on with the owls. My husband had a stroke last week and is still in the hospital, which is why I've had to ask people to get me up to speed on the owls. My husband is okay, by the way...they found a hole in his heart (a congenital defect) which allowed a cbt to pass into his brain. Right now he's on blood thinners...he'll probably need surgery, but we'll deal with that when we get there.
Thanks again- Natalie

Owlbominable Snowman Jan (Bayonne, NJ) - just a heads up, in case you're not seeing your posts after you make them - The automated SPAMBOT may be withholding/deleting some of your comments due to repetition. Especially likely if you copy and paste the same text within a short period of time. It has snagged many of my own comments in the past when re-posting informative snippets and links.

Today, 10:08:29 - Like - Reply - Delete

Jan (Bayonne, NJ) For some reason, some of my posts got repeated 3 times. Don't know what that was all about, but it would certainly make the spambot alarms ringin'! I tried deleting the extras but they seem to come back??? What the heck did I do???

Owlbominable Snowman If you didn't repeat them then it's likely a funky temporary glitch in the system. Just thought I'd let you know because I thought maybe you couldn't see the triplicates.

The system still may delete/hide all of them later, just be aware for that possibility.
Or, be alert, the world always needs more lerts. :)

Ten minutes ago had a 2.4 earthquake: 10 miles from my house. For you non-Californians, that's just a hiccup and a little bump. The thing is, when you first hear it coming, you never know if it's the first wave of a much bigger event. In this case, it was the outer edges of a great, big, scary EQ! Not surprised you didn't feel it! If I hadn't been sitting at the computer, I probably wouldn't have felt it at all. PS: Lived in Fountain Valley for years. Betty, here is a place where you can check earthquakes around the world, the earth even though many people do not realize it, is in constant movement and motion besides moving through space, orbit and rotation. Sometimes when it is quiet, I can swear I feel and sense movement of the earth in my region, in NE Florida. Watch animals they are more attuned to their senses than many of us are. Stay safe.

To be recorded on this site, I think they have to be bigger than a 4.0, we had a 4.5 in Haiti this morning: <http://www.iris.edu/seismon/>

Hi JL. Besides being a MOD, I'm also have EOOD (Earthquake Obsessive Disorder). After going through my first really big EQ years ago, I found I was less frightened when I was more educated on the subject. I check USGS frequently, and I'm notified by cell if there's an EQ over 6.0 anywhere in the world. It's extremely interesting, and as you said, it's just part of the natural geological makeup of our planet.

This has been a public service announcement! Now we'll return you to the regularly scheduled program from San Marcos

That is so kewl that you can be notified now, in the '60's I went through at 6 something and I will never forget it, sitting right on the ground when it happened. It seemed to have gone on forever, but it was only less than a minute. Stay safe. Volcanoes are interesting also...

Hope you all will indulge for a moment, but I so wanted to share my experience last night. Last night, for me, was both exhilarating and comical. It was so much fun to watch the 2 owlets test their wings last night and see that one was a little more adventurous than the other. I think it was Patison that was a little bolder last night and at one point had miscalculated and ended up grabbing at the pole and then sliding down. We then didn't see he/she for awhile and began wondering if everything was okay to only see a great big ole wing come across the camera. He/she had been perched on top of the camera all along- What a hoot! This has been so much more than I expected!
