Just back from San Diego. We found out that San Marcos was only 8 miles from where we were in Encinados. Took a ride over....beautiful town. Realized that I had no info other than the town name. Owls don't fly in the daytime, had no idea where the owl box was....but had a nice lunch at a local brew pub. Would have felt remiss if I didn't at least visit the area while I was there. I've been watching from Philly for months...it was nice to be in the same time zone to watch for a change too.

                           Just a note for those people who are owned by animals out there. I have a tip for giving pils. Right now, I am giving Mer 6 pils twice a day. I get the empty capsules at the pharmacy, they have all sizes, just ask, and put the pills in those. Then it is easy when giving a lot of pills. Also the animal doesn't taste them when they go down. My vet told me about it, and it has worked great!

                           The Weather Channel says the winds are 16-20 mph in San Marcos. Up till now it's been fairly calm for the initial test flights.
                           It will be interesting to see how Max Patti and Austin react to the wind. Will they find it too scary, or will they use it to their advantage to really do some acrobatic flying now that they have some experience?
                           We shall see.
                           Iv'e noticed the timing of their inital flights coincided with the difference in the number of days between hatchings.
                           According to my estimate Wesley should fly either tonight or tomorrow. The wind may affect his decision tonight!

Basically, the shutter speed doesn't matter with flash photography, at least not in the sense you're likely thinking. The shutter can remain open for much longer than needed to make the exposure because it's almost pitch dark outside. The Flash is what illuminates the subject and freezes the motion of the owls in flight. The Flash duration is measured in micro seconds. (one of the reasons people really shouldn't get upset about Carlos using flash, but I digress) Below is a link from Moose Peterson, describing what I just said with a few more details. Moose is a world renowned curmudgeon ad wildlife photographer. His pictures ain't bad. And he has a ton of info on his website, stuff you'll likely enjoy reading. 😃 peterson.com/techtips/flash.html#shutterspeed

In addition, the camera Carlos is using is capable of shooting very fine images at ISO speed 3200, which means that there is very, very little light needed for a proper exposure.

We saw this in St. Louis news, a barn owl struck by a fire truck. There is a happy ending. Here is a link to the story.

Nice story and to think they (or someone) found time to contact help for it while at a house fire

That's not a Barn Owl the man is holding in the picture, though. I think it's a Barred Owl; not sure, but it's definitely not a Barn Owl!

Doug and Mary, what a great story! Something strikes me though. The owl in the photograph is clearly not a barn owl. It looks more like a banded owl,

Yes Eiliott, this does not look like a barn owl. Maybe a "barred owl" or another type. Missouri has 5 or 6 common owls. This area west of St. Louis is mix

Has anyone heard anything from Carlos if the camera can be fixed and whether or not we'll be getting back inside the owl box again.
I've seen nothing about it.

      From what I understand Carlos left the out side camera on so that we can see the owls at night, when he comes back we will be able to see the owls inside the box again.

                           Lynda, I almost used a photo I have of a sunflower the Blue Jays (called Scrub Jays here) planted for me by dropping a seed I suppose. It was just one Sunflower and I was so proud and happy to find it in our back area. I took several photos of it and often switch my desktop background to it. I was skimming thru photos when deciding what to use for an Avatar and told myself that I couldn't use a Sunflower because Lynda has one for her avatar. It is my favorite flower. To me, Sunflowers exude happiness. Anyway, just wanted to share that with you after seeing you noticed Karin had a Sunflower for her avatar.

                    Just came home from celebrating 190 year anniversary of Lewis Cass Landing on Metro Park in Lake St Clair. The Voyaguers did the landing with 3 Voyaguer Canoes. One with Native Americans, one with Dignetaries and the last one with the Voyaguers. They had a little skit to act out and had a little to eat then they carried on with their trip. It was really great. We had a lot of visitors too. Everyone enjoyed the landing. After the public left we had a big feast. This was the first time they did this and they are planning on doing it annually. Just wanted to share a little bit of history with you.

But the most excitement happens around 8:30 Pacific time at night when three of the owlets play all over and around the box. Wesley has not come out yet, but watches his siblings intently the entire time! So the camera is perfect for the night time performance!

                           My understanding is that, that camera/computer is down. Which is ok because the owlets don't become active until later in the evening, around 8: 15ish PST. Then we can see themcome outside the box.

                           Buffalo, prepared well, is not much different fromgrass/pasture raised beef. Provided of course the buffalo hasn't been raised in a feed lot like most beef. It could be a little tougher and a little more flavorful than marbled beef, but it has hardly any real fat in it so the preparation is key to avoid drying it out.
                           Glad you're having a good time. Haven't missed much today or last night.

                           Christina, you were TOTALLY helpful! As I just said below but it's getting buried: If not for you, I wouldn't have known to even ask. It's amazing to me how, as things happen in Mollyland, they seemso memorable and momentous that you think, "How could I forget?" And then the events just blur together, as you say. That's why we started keeping copies of the stats in the wiki and doing the daily summaries! But it's a collective effort, to get this captured!

                           Sure you were helpful! You spoke up and gave reason to question things further. I distinctly remember the incident because I was miffed at myself for missing the great shot of a rodent silhouette on the owl box, but I can't remember for the life of me which night it was. Someone else does have that shot though. And I think it's Kathryn R.
                           In the chat I remember people applauding Max's ability to "not drop it" before he went inside. FWIW.

                           This is the one I captured about 1 pm here, 13 - 8 = around 5am CA time - I think.
                           Been such a lovely day here have been neglecting owls and doing some gardening.

                           Yes! It was Pat D! (Hi Pat!)
                           And Latrippi, I have no idea when the first one was but I suspect it's been happening all along which is why the delivery count might have been so low.
                           Some of the deliveries are now taking place of f camera.

                          Latrippi, it was the first or second night that Max ventured outside. He was sitting on the perch attached to the owl box and one of the adults flew in with a treat. they landed on the T-bar perch and handed off the prey to him. He sat there for a few minutes with the mouse/gopher(?) dangling from his beak before turning around and going inside to consume the critter.

                          Also, either Kathryn or Dorothy (I believe) have a great photo of the event. Max sitting on the perch looking around, and the poor limp rodent's shadow is clearly visible on the wall of the owl box. I failed to copy it. I'll ask if they still have it.

                          Yes, that's the one I was talking about. I just don't remember the exact night (that's why I threw out 2-3 nights) because my days are starting to bleed together from this owl schedule/lack of sleep. I'll refer to James then.

                           you, I would have put down in the timeline that the first outside delivery was last night and that would have been wrong. It's a collective effort! So

                       Hi guys! I see you've been having fun—so glad. I finally sprung Jim from the hospital today, so hope I can spend a little time back and forth on here with you all tonight. I've sure missed you.
                        Guess I'mgoing to have to be nice to my husband, Jim, for a week or so... oh dear!

                                The same. Spoiled on boiled chicken and canned dog food. But he is eating. More tests. He is anemic and might be bleeding internally. Waiting for more results. Then maybe x-rays and ultrasound to see if they can see bleeding or cancer. But I don't want to take away fromyour good news, or the fun

                                Ruth, they will stay in or around the box until they are 80 days old or thereabouts. M&M will continue to provide for themfor all of that time. So, they will probably be around for another few weeks.

                        people here later who don't like to see all this "personal stuff and garbage" (their words not mine) cluttering up the chat. A long rant about that from a viewed about that last night. My opinion - I LIKE it. It's what makes this place so SPECIAL to me.
