Today is the first day I have felt sad about all this ending soon. "gub"
Maybe it's because my husband brought the RV out of storage yesterday and I've been cleaning and packing this morning for a camping trip next weekend - four days! I left once before camping while they were still in the box, but now it seems so different. I'm closer to all my MOD friends here, and know the owlets much more intimately...
I'm pretty sure Wesley will have ventured out by then, but still....

Yeah!! I am so happy for you Chris!! I was on the phone just now with my vet. Mer's platelet count is back to normal, but his marrow is making cells, and it is showing he has anemia. He asked for more tests at the lab, and won't get those till Monday. Keeping him on the Prednisone for now. Next step is x-rays to look for bleeding and cancer. If that shows nothing, then an ultrasound. Say prayers for us. I am sorry to tell bad news after your such good news Chris!! I am again, so happy for you!!!

Kelly and Becky, I had a gorgeous orange tabby too, Simon. He lived to 20. Of the mellow tabby tribe, they are the melowest. I have a darling tuxedo man now, Jonny. I call him the rubber band, the way he bounces around. I also have a cockatiel and SHE has her own room!

I am betting Sunday, too. He still look a little like a baby. Did you notice him doing his indoor wing flapping exercises to practice for his/her debut? S/he is taking notes and doing visualizations. Just like Austin did before his/her awesome first flight (completely skipping the ledging, branching steps.

If he doesn't fledge by Wednesday, does that mean he really is runt and deprived of food by the other owls...? Or is he just introverted? Or did he figure out he is being fed first by staying inside? The last I heard, one of the other O&O San Marcos owls has been out on the perch, but they seem to be content to stay inside lacking the degree of curiosity of the Royal owls. To me, it seems the O&O owls lost their down a lot quicker, as the age difference is not that great between M&M's owls and O&O's owls. I think peer pressure alone will cause Wes to plummet to the ground tonight or tomorrow night...

Good morning from Purdy WA. My avatar today is my cat Sundance. I adopted him about 2 months ago. He is about 3 years old. Someone left him at the vet, and wouldn't pay the bill. He had an abscess on his forehead and a shaved head from surgery, ear mites, diarrhea, and a sprained tail. (My vet was so happy I adopted him, I get free vet services for him for a year!) He is just fine now, and a bundle of energy and joy for me!! I call him Sunny. And he is!! Hope everyone has a great day!

What a great story! What's funny is that I have a male tail-less orange tabby named Circo. He has a growth in the middle of his forehead that I always say is his devil-horn. He's a sweetheart though - more of a lover than a fighter, which is why I guess he only has one. I'd wonder if they were related, but I'm in Virginia. And I lost my Sunny (short for Sunshine) earlier this year. She was a 15 year old beagle mix. Hope you have a great day too!

A vole is a small rodent resembling a mouse but with a stouter body, a shorter hairy tail, a slightly rounder head, smaller ears and eyes, and differently formed molars (high-crowned and with angular cusps instead of low-crowned and with rounded cusps). There are approximately 155 species of voles. They are sometimes known as meadow mice or field mice in North America. Vole species form the subfamily Arvicolinae with the lemmings and the muskrats. (fromwiki)
Moles are completely distinct--they are not even rodents!

I'm not aware of our owls catching moles at all. I think moles spend almost all their time underground. Voles are what we commonly call meadow mice. I suspect that many of the times Molly and McGee bring in a mouse, that's what it is. Voles are cute and plump and usually brown. Other mice are sleeker and often (but not always) have color variations tending toward gray. If it lives inside your house, it's probably not a vole, but if it lives in the meadow behind your house, it very well might be!

They are mammals. The rodents have teeth for gnawing and need to chew because their teeth never stop growing. They make up about 50% of mammal species.

don't know, and the cable news people laughing about it weren't sure either...perfect owl food...could you imagine an owl like Austin, swooping in for the catch of a rodent, in the middle of a press conference....it was running along the bottom of a long long row of steps....open space, perfect for an owl to scoop up, and off, in a blink of an eye....can you tell how proud I am of our owlets, like they're our very own children 😊

In the basement there are comments about feeling old. I don't FEEL old. That reminds me...I have been trying to find the quote from the "Dune" series of books where Paul Atreides links with an old lady and is surprised to find that she does not think of herself as old. Do any of you know the quote? Today, 09:11:11 - Flag - Like - Reply

It's really hard for me most of the time to not put human emotions on this owl family - but here goes, I find Moly and McGee exceptional parents. While I do not understand everything that is happening, some things pop out to me. My thought today is that they are continuing to bring food to the box, making sure that Wesley is gaining strength for his adventure, while keeping eyes aware on the others outside the box. I wish we could see the process of the owlets learning to soar and to hunt, but I guess we will just have to leave that to our imagination and to nature. I will forever now be looking to the skies and admiring the workings of this world around me. This has been so amazing.

Good morning from Atlanta. Here are the slightly slimstats fromlast night. They'll be up on the wiki in a few minutes.

May 21/22. Total treats: 11! Mollie brought 2 gophers, 1 bunny, and 1 rat, with last delivery at 5:09a. McGee brought 3 rodents, 2 mousies, and 2 rats, with last delivery at 4:56a.

Branching Stats: First out at 8:18p. Second out at 8:19p. Austin out at 8:27p (identified by the "do not pass Go" launching style). All three returned by sunrise. Wesley still standing on the doorsill, looking around.

Yes, it hurts to see the rodents hanging out of parents' mouths in the photos...I've had many pet rats and they are lovely. So one of the things this experience has taught me is, nature is nature and must go on! I never understood the food chain so graphically before.

Yes, Linda, and mice, voles and rats are at the bottom of the food chain for predators. That's why they breed so prolifically. Natural selection is a wonderful thing to experience in action!

Try not to attract negative attention to yourself and it's most likely you won't have anything to worry about.

That's why it's best to flag inappropriate content and just move on.
No need to make a big production out of everything.
The less attention they get the quicker the troublemakers go away.
Trying to outsmart or belittle or publicly "out" the unruly ALMOST ALWAYS ends in a mess.

Good morning from Cape Cod... I slept in this morning. One of the perks for being a senior and not having to go to work.
I see it is quiet in the owl box and that all is well, so am off to play in my garden today. 😊

Little Robin babes last summer out at the baseball field. Sun was shining JUST right! I was remorseful when I returned and some kids had destroyed the nest. 😊

One of my favorite images from last night. These two were intently watching the antics going on below. The way these two were bobbing and rotating their heads was the funniest thing I've seen in a while! Or maybe it was funny because I was so tired! I was sure that Wesley was going to take his first step, he was SOOO into the flapping going on!!!

I remember that scene you took the screen shot of, and it was the cutest thing! And I noticed that Wesley, watching his siblings flap their wings outside, instinctively did the same thing inside. He is learning from his siblings what they had to learn themselves. He's making the connections, and that's the most important thing of all!
