It's hot in Orlando today too. I'm trying to work outside but keep coming in to cool off (and to pop in at this site LOL). I've seen enough butterflies today to fill a jewelry counter and a few varieties of birds, too. We still have a couple bald eagles in the area but they should be leaving soon. Lots of cardinals and blue jays. Mockers, osprey and crows, of course. I can hear a red-winged blackbird but haven't seen him. Woodpecker, hummingbird and swallowtailed kite - I've seen one each of those.

That's an interesting question, but I haven't seen an answer to it. Anyone?
There is a good article about what happens after they leave the nest that I found on the Barn Owl Trust site. Here's the link <http://www.barnowltrust.org.uk/infopage.htm?lid=77>. It sounds like they'll all move off in different directions in order to set up their own territories. It's possible that some territories may overlap, but competition for food could be high so it's not likely they would continue to interact much. On the other hand, barn owls seem to be very non-aggressive especially when you consider that they are raptors. I'm guessing the gophers wouldn't agree with me on that point though.

Barn Owls raise multiple broods in a single year if there is an abundance of prey. They may pick different mates for each brood.

RUTH - you've been asking about the owl on the fence with Carlos? I don't think there are pictures of that although I could be wrong. Carlos said he was sitting out back of his house, watching the owls fly around, when one of them came from a nearby tree and landed on the fence about 10 feet away from him. He said he did not take a picture because he didn't want to spook the owl, so he just sat there and enjoyed the moment.
Hope that helps!

Not sure who we are talking at, but we don't know the genders. All young owls have spots on the chest for camo, so they are not necessarily female.

But, as with many young birds, the juvenile chest spots are there but other signs of gender may be already in their adult phase, such as the white color extending up to the eye area, brown coloring on the chest, and certain patterns of the barring on the wings and tail. The chest spots at this point in their life are not a good indicator of gender.

A posting below about banding of the eagles in California. I wish I had the time and space to share with you all what I wonderful experience it is to watch that - up close and personal. I was fortunate to be able to participate in the banding of 2 eagle chicks about 2 weeks from fledging in the late 1990's. Being out in a boat all night with wildlife biologists and "calling" boons to come near the boat for gentle, careful capture for a few minutes for brief banding and taking of blood and feather samples (to check on mercury and lead levels that are toxic to them and affects their eggs) was another unforgettable experience.

Who determines how the comments in the chat are compressed? Is there a standard? Sometimes 2-3 comments are compressed and other times larger numbers of responses or comments are not compressed. It looks like a random process to me.

If you "open" an already collapsed set of comments, they will stay open for some time, regardless how many comments are in it... Other groups get compressed or collapsed each time the stream updates and new content is added. That's one of the reasons the "likes" seem to disappear also. They get "covered up" by new content coming in, usually a new comment to the same group.

Sugapea, I love that too. His own individual way of exiting! But check it out: Last night, a little after midnight, Austin actually stepped out onto the porch and then to the perch, very awkwardly! He scrambled and slipped several times, on the porch and then on the perch and then on the porch again. Eventually he managed to turn around on the perch and face the door. Max and Pattison were away at the time, off camera cavorting someplace -- as if Austin had waited for the chance to figure out with no one else around!

James, in the earlier discussion about copyrights, HF made several posts and asked if we saw any Molly-related items for sale posted here to report is to him (Sportsman's Paradise). Later I posted something about a poster with actual photos of Molly, Carlos, etc that was listed here last night for sale. I don't think the person who posted it means any harm, but should that post be reported to HF???? It can probably be found in the PDF (I'm guessing between 9:00 and 11:00 last night). I've got to go now and leave that decision in yur good and capable hands 😊

I think some folks are locating themselves in "unusual" locations just so they're not hidden with everyone else.
If not, there's an uncommon rate of merchant seamen, pirates, and migrating whales watching from rather remote sites.

Pixelated is a word and it is almost always visible in a full screen view of this camera. I mean about it constantly. It is most apparent when there is motion in the video, or when the compression artifacts line up with a vertical line in the video. The lines on the owls faces, for example.

James, re the Molly bumper stick, etc. It really isn't "my" bumper sticker - just one was "Inked" here. I thought at the time it was cute and re-posted it. I'm sure, before the Molly experience is over, there will be lots of Molly items for sale out there without Carlos' (or Carlos's) permission. Some people always want to capitalize on other people work.

The chat sometimes goes so quickly and by the time I do a little "homework" it is WAY in the past. Interesting comments about Carlos having copyrights on all photos, Molly merchandise, etc. and cafe press.com products. I actually posted the Molly bumper sticker from cafe press.com here a couple of weeks ago - thinking it was cute and never giving a thought to copyright infringement. Late last evening (Eastern time) - between 9:00 and 11:00 PDT, during all of the owl activity, a person did post a poster of Molly pictures that a friend had made and wanted to sell here and on eBay (gave a price, but don't remember). He/she was advised that the pictures were copyrighted and would have to get permission from Carlos.

It's a termuse when owls expel a "pellet" through their mouth. Although probably more than you wanted to know and may seem guesome to post here - An owl can't digest all of the fur, bones, etc. so a pellet is created of that material and expelled. All female owls actually breaks this furry mess up and uses it as the bedding for the owls nest.

Lynda, you're stider would be fine without the photo. Maybe an artist could draw up an image of Molly to be used on such items. An artist's rendering of Molly would likely be sufficient to bypass Carlos' copyright, provided it was a new work and not a manipulated photo. The law gets very sticky in that area, however. Best to go with a stylized artist's interpretation rather than a manipulated or copied photo.

Note that Carlos has not mentioned anything about Trademarks, which is what he would need to do to prevent someone from using the "Molly the Owl" name. Names get Trademarked, images are copyright protected, the minute you create the image. Registering the copyright only makes defending yourself against infringement easier, but it is not required to claim ownership of a copyrighted work. You own the copyright on every picture you ever take, whether you realize it or not.

Hello Jim, love your new identiy. If I may interject my opinion here about 'not' using the photo. Frankly the photo looks like a Barn Owl to me. I don't see the problem using that photo. Not being a lawyer, I would think the name 'Molly The Owl' would be more of a problem. But if there's that much doubt then I would recommend that Lynda run this by a lawyer that specializes in copyright law. That is if it's even worth it. You'd have to sell 1000's of bumper stickers to offset legal & printing costs anyway. I say, have fun with this stuff but don't expect to make money off of it. Now about your new alias...you're nuts, lol...I say that affectionately.

Good afternoon from Maine. Just did a quick scroll to the sub-basement - but only back to 10:00 a.m EDT. The post about "skivvies" was funny. Remembering the sequence of how James came up with "Owlbinomable" even funnier - except it was because of Kristi's error (and you were a good sport about that, Kristi!!). It's also nice to see the posted appreciation from new and part-time visitors, recognizing the help and effort given by people on this site (it makes the "grousing" and complaints SO insignificant):

I seriously doubt there will ever be a consensus.

I've read too many times now that it's almost impossible to tell for certain until after the first molt. Or one lays and egg 😊

Of course that doesn't mean many won't label them as they wish, being human nature to do so, I guess. I've decided to stick with the names given and just call them all guys (or owls), despite the tendency for some to see various gender traits.

Thanks for the link cj. Whoever set up that cafe press merchandise is violating Carlos' copyright and Stacey O'Brien's, as well. Many of those images are from her book and website. I would report them (to Cafe Press and Carbs) and discourage anyone from purchasing anything from that seller.

Making merchandise with the name "Molly the Owl" or anything similar is fine, as Carlos has not taken out a Trademark on that name. As a brand, as it were. But using any of his images is off-limits without his express permission - Cut and dry.

Interesting as that copyright thing is... I wonder if that was put up by someone helping him or what? Maybe his grandson? A true copyright would lead you to an actual legal document.... Almost like they posted it just to say it. Must have had some problems with someone trying sell stuff with those names? Also, to get a copyright is a long process that can cost tons of $...

Not True, HF. Carlos owns the copyright on any photo/video he creates, at the time of creation. It is registration of the copyright that people often confuse. To register with the copyright office is a very simple process and can be just a matter of sending them a CD/DVD of images. It's not expensive at all. I do it all the time. Copyright info. - <http://www.copyright.gov/circs/>

Patent filing is very expensive and time consuming. Not Copyright.

cj, the only site authorized to sell Molly merchandise that I am aware of is: OfficialMolly the Owl Merchandise Site

If you see another site selling merchandise with Carlos' images or screenshots, I'm sure he would like to be informed about it. He has said repeatedly that he is fine with others making items for their own personal use, but not for marketing or selling other merchandise.

3 of the owls have flown and do it almost the instant it gets dark each night. They are hopping and flapping everywhere. M&M deliver treats to the box and to the owls outside. The owlets are returning to the box after their time outside and all are now in the box. We don't know what they may first decide to sleep in the nearby trees. I read an explanation about this (I think in Stacey O'Brien's Wesley the Owl). Somehow, having something to do with the way the bird's leg joint is able to bend, when a bird is standing on 1 leg it uses the other leg to create a sort of platform so that the body is supported and relaxed at the same time. Kind of like carrying your own little stool around, I guess. Sorry if this all sounds fuzzy, it is just from memory.

Has Carlos come on to talk at all since he has been back? I keep checking in and out but haven't caught him yet. Boy, the days he was gone was like a death in the family. So lonely!
As to WHAT I will be doing when the OwlCam is no longer active.....guess it will be to get rid of the bags under my eyes FIRST and then perhaps finally get to start on SPRING CLEANING.....or would that be SUMMER Cleaning???? Thanks to all who put links in for us to check on. I have a friend who was so sad to be away on a 14 day cruise while all the fledging is taking place. She will be home on Tues and I was hoping Wesley would wait for her!

On Molly's blog of last night, there is a picture of an owl down on the ledge with a rodent in the mouth - WHO IS IT? I saw it at the time, and saw the owl fly away after one of the others tried to get it from him/her. Would Molly have flown away with it, because I did not see her take it to the door?

If Carlos didn't ID the bird on the photo then it's highly unlikely that anyone knows.
He usually puts the name, if known, in the url/filename for the picture. And he has the best shot at getting it right.

You may have because it's doubtful they are hunting yet.. They are being brought food outside the box though, so anything is possible at this point. They have been eating on the platform, as well as inside the box. Probably on the ground and out of view, as well.

Jan (Bayonne, NJ) Love it! What filter is that - fressop?
Today, 08:42:59 - Flag - Like - Reply

Owlbominable Snowman (a.k.a. JH) Actually, it's Alfredo a La Hilo. In other words, it isn't a filter but a combination of a simple texture and the bloom tool. I gave up using most filters because I wanted to learn how the filters worked. Working with the various ways of layering just three simple tools produces some pretty cool results. Although, I wish I had a nice clean original file to play with.

The green moon is an anomaly from the infrared camera used. It shifts the color spectrum of the image so that subjects illuminated by the IR light are rendered as neutral: thus shifting objects illuminated by the Sun to be off-color.

High winds are forecast all day for San Diego County. Chula Vista has higher than usual winds right now, but we usually are moderate in the weather department. How is the wind situation in Owl Land? Sounds windy. By the way, what is the pole holding up the owl house made of?

A note to Sawwhet... I agree... these guys make my day. I have learned so much from them about the owl's life. They are definitely good for the soul.

Some of them do and some don't. Very rarely does he split out a "live" appearance of himself. Usually only when he's talking to school kids or the media.
His little Fireside chats with cafe mocha are not usually edited on their own. BUT, that sounds like a great summer project for grandson Austin!

OK - it was fun to check in and get updated but now I'm off for a long list of Sunday chores, doesn't that sound like a great day? I was watching owls, pool cleaning, grocery shopping.... wow, sounds like I didn't get anything done during the week, Sunday LOL. I didn't, because I was watching owls! Owl be back tonight.
btw, I LOVE the story of the owl landing on the perch near Carlos. That shows how comfortable these owls are with Carlos and Donna because they've always been moving around the yard where the owls could watch them during the day. They, there's that guy we saw messing around with our landing pads! I'm going to go get a better look! Hey, Dude!!

Doubt if anyone can make one as good as this has been and have such good people running it. I know we all wish Carlos will do this again should M&M come back to start a new nest though he said he wouldn't we can all hope anyway.

It has been an amazing journey to have been witnessed and involved in right down to this chat, the people and the ones who have recorded it all on WKI, <http://molvow.pbworks.com/>, to the people who moderate, who are so helpful and who continually come up with all these most excellent ideas and funnies!

You don't really need a new site. Go to the top of this page and click on Live Wildlife Posts. Select one and encourage the regulars here to participate in that site - or even in several of the sites. It wouldn't be long before people were posing questions and others were answering. It's been great to have Carlos tie all of this together for these owls but it's the great people here who have made this the extraordinary experience it's been. You can even go to cappress.com and design your own t-shirts from screen shots. Carlos has everything here copyrighted but most sites don't. If you love doing this, don't give it up.

Colleen and Christina could see it, but not anyone who has refreshed/entered the site since I made the post. This has been a major source of confusion and misunderstanding for some time. Posts show up and then get eaten, some people see them and others don't. It's led to more miscommunication than anything else. I've seen two people argue over links that were both "right there!" and "not there!" at the same time.

Here's a copy of the post. I'll try masking the links again, with fromnow on. But I don't like to do that because people reading the PDF have no way of finding the information behind the links.

Merritt, I saw that and did that keep Wesley in? It was really blowing, and cool. That would be hard to give up the coziness and warmth of the owl box on a night like that. Did you not be on Friday night how, Austin want to hope and do like it's older siblings but he kept an eye on the owl box, and finally stayed on the perch by the box actually answering every time Wesley screech with a one of his own, his throat and beak were moving and you could barely hear it. I can see now that they do seem to fledge in pairs, I think Wesley may have his debut tonight or Monday night. Amazing to watch.

I saw that, too, Merritt. The one on the ledge looked like a stoic little sentry, guarding the box as if the crown jewels were inside!

Hi! I saw your greeting below. It is 80 here already, too! And you're right about it being a preview. I'll never forget the summer of 2000. Forty days in a row with temps 100 or higher. 40 days! In a row! 100+! I'm still traumatized. 😞

Gotta go now. I screwed up the stats this morning; forgot to say that all are safely inside. So here's the corrected version:

May 22/23. Total treats: 10: 8:58p McGee, gopher; 10:17p Whoop rodent; 11:01p McGee, rat; 12:11a Molly, rodent; 12:51a Molly, rat; 1:02a McGee, mouse; 1:11a McGee, live mouse; 1:44a McGee, rodent; 3:44a Molly, rodent; 4:05a McGee, rat.

Branching stats: First out 8:18p. Second out 8:19p. Third out 8:22p. All in by 5:13a. Wesley still enjoying dining alone.

One of the owlets landed on the fence about 10 to 15 feet from where Carlos was sitting. He didn't dare move or take a picture for fear of starting the owl.
