Gaak, I forgot I live in the computer age. I can make iron-on pattern transfers for an owl fabric on my computer and print them off on my printer.

I've helped my mother print directly on muslin using freezer paper ironed to the material and then cut to paper size. It limits the size of the material printed, but is great for things like quilting, making pocketbooks, etc. That's what she uses it for. It works great and when treated right, lasts like any printed fabric.
We got the directions from Nancy's Notions, I think. They are probably all over the internet. I'm too sleepy to look.

The pileated woodpecker is such a beautiful bird!! It makes me wonder if they don't get headaches from "chopping" out such large chunks of wood from a tree! We have one or two around here - they require a very large territory of their own.

Busy, busy chat room tonight!! I'm turning in very soon (I just might lurk a little longer 😊). My closing for tonight-I know many of us would love to have some of that fabric as a keepsake (I'm a quilter and love fabric and have a huge stash of fabrics), but I don't expect to see it marketed commercially - it would be a very limited market for a very short time, so any fabric company would hesitate to make large runs of it. Not to be a "party-popper" but I'd just as soon it not be marketed. The shirt was made for a special occasion for a very special person and he should be able to have the only one. Good night all.

Many of the MODS (including me) would like to have a Molly-themed material. If it is not EXACTLY like Carbs' shirt, I, for one would not mind. There are plenty of creative, artistic people who could come up with something. We could make our own unique pattern in a fabric block print if we had some inoleum (or other substance) blocks with the owls, nest box, etc. That way we could pick our own colors.

Did he really say that some of th food treats included Spam that was deep-fried and called "rabbits feet"? (That would make an interesting topic of discussion here sometime when it's quite - how many of us remember that gross Spam and the ways we used to eat it 😊 😊) And he said that John Atkinson designed the fabric - no wonder those images on the fabric looked familiar !!

And Donna ! Wsh there was some way to know over time if the owls come back to the box - do owls roost?

We need a central site now for all to go to from time to time ... and there is always next mating season!

Time for a 10:30PM snack. Corn on the cob. You-all DO know to trim the stalk and tip end, then stick the corn in the microwave. I zap it for 2 minutes, but I like my corn with a little fight left in it. Pull the corn out, let it sit for a minute or two, then pull the stalks off. The silks will come with it. (This does not work on old, nasty, dried-out corn.)

Do you know what corn "smut" is? I used to pick and pack corn on the farm back summers in junior high school. Got up, rode our bicycles two miles at 6 a.m. freezing those July mornings, then sweltered on the way home. One of my best memories and I still recognize the smell of that air every summer morning...

We lost power for a couple of days here. Severe weather, microbursts, trees on houses, the whole 9 yards. The whole town (western Mass) was under a state of emergency until they could get all the downed power lines out of the way. Tossed what was in the freezer earlier today and took my first shower @ home since Wednesday! Hallelujah!

No fun, Lisa. Been there, done that. The worst was the ice storm of 1998 that hit Maine very hard (even worse than the one in MN/NH a year or so ago). Many were without power for 10 to 14 days and 25 degree weather. People who had generators were inviting friends and strangers alike to share a meal or take a shower.

I think it was two years ago. It looked like a bomb went off all along route 2. Lots of people trapped and without power for two weeks. Most people around here are pretty self-sufficient. Same thing went around to help neighbors, pull people out, offer heat, shelter and food. No industry around here, but people are pretty nice. A friend said it sounded like gunshots in the woods with all the trees that were snapping under the weight of the ice. Pretty impressive. I am slowly looking for a generator for future events around here. Power outages are the norm.

We primed out bedroom to paint it Myrtle Beach Blue, and planted (4 hours travel time and 4 cemeteries) flowers. Mind you, at each cemetery my dashund gets out and leashed, we "run chipmunks." He never catches them, but when he finds a fresh-scented hole, he digs and yanks my mouthful of grass and dirt. He must be dreaming now, because just when Natalie posted about the barn owls, I heard this noise. It was my puppy dreaming and yipping -- still chasing!

Learned a few years back when I started making 1500 mile trips to see my son and his family, that cemeteries are the very best places to stop and let the dog run and the driver stretch her legs! Cemeteries are so often on a hill or elevation and it's nice to hear the silence!

Hi! It's too bad there isn't an easy way to tell these owlettes apart. It's easy to be sure about Wesley right now but when they lose all of the baby feathers, it will be hard to tell them apart. Too bad they couldn't have been banded on their legs. Is that bad for me to say? I mean, not that I would want to harm them in any way, but was just thinking that it would be nice to keep tabs on them once they are grown and gone. I wish them a long and healthy life.

Banding wouldn't let you know if they had a long and healthy life. Having a band on them works only if they are being checked on regularly. They are going to leave. There would have to be some way to track them. If they were banded, Carlos or someone would have to check dead owls or go around capturing owls to see if something happened to them. They are leaving soon, and I assume that they are going to have long and productive owl lives and raise lots of little owls.

Back to Mary Carroll's post of the May apple link. Going to the page describing range, habitat, pollination, etc. It does say that the ripe fruit is OK, but the unripe fruit is toxic. Liked your story, too, Tip. I always had to caution my kids about various berries on walks in the woods. I basically told them not to eat any of them unless blueberries, field strawberries, blackberries, etc. They finally learned to identify the checkerberries (a wonderful treat 😊)

We have shadberries in our yard. It took 30 years before I managed to beat the birds to a SINGLE fruit. Forget my wild blueberries. The birds get them when they start to turn red. I keep talking about putting nets over the bushes.

Nets work wonders! I have two highbush blueberry plants out front. I get a pretty good harvest from one. The other isn't doing so well. But the netting keeps most of the fruit away from the birds. It is funny though when a deer gets up inside the plants. Had one crawl under the nets last

Did a quick Google check to see if there were any early postings from newspapers in CA about the picnic. I think Bill said he would check for URLs tomorrow. This site was listed in my search <http://www.smarterproducts.co.uk/catalog/Amazonas-Molly-Picnic-Rug.html> for a Molly Picnic blanket. Thank goodness no picture of our Molly on it!!! Wonder how many took one to the picnic today. I have no problem with the items on the transfer site - they apparently all have Carlos's blessing. Way back when in primary school I was taught it was Carlos'. But now I often see Carlos' IN PRINT in a lot of books in the past decade. I don't understand why there's a change nowadays. Hence you'll sometimes see me using both forms.

Lynda, it's capitalism. I remember when the Berlin Wall fell, a dear friend of mine presented me with a lovely box that purportedly contained a piece of the Berlin Wall, along with a certificate of authenticity. The artifact was a chip of plasterly concrete that frankly could've been from almost any crumbling wall. Those souvenirs were selling for around $24 at the time. It came to light that the market in phony Berlin Wall artifacts had been one of the great scams of the era. I still have no idea if I have the real thing. Not that it matters! There may well be a burgeoning market in fake Mollybliss! 😊

 Judy, a crow is suspect, but the video doesn't show that for sure. There was a fierce wind about that time, and just as the camera seems to have been knocked over, there is something that appears to be a black wing flash across the screen. The owner of the feed spent several hours trying to find both tiny hummers. He found one and placed it back in the nest. It seems he didn't find the other. I guess it is possible it was carried off by a crow.

 I kept hearing the crow and was worrying about it. But thanks for the clarification. So both fell from the nest and one was saved, and it could have been the wind?

 Thoughts from the book, All I Ever Needed to Know I Learned in Kindergarten. Thought about our experiences here.
 1. Open your home and your heart.
 2. Parents, be consistent in taking care of your offspring.
 3. Parents, know that your job is to guide your children so that they will be enabled to take their rightful place in this world.
 4. Children, find your place in the world. It is important that you do the job you were designed for.
 5. Work with what you have and learn from it. Bolty taught us to be aware of sharp twigs!
 6. Brothers and sisters -keep one another clean, fed, and warm when your parents are gone.
 7. Do not be afraid to lean on one another.
 There may be more to come, feel free to add. Just some random thoughts.
