Our Fresno Ca area is very flat so to catch water for everyone they have ponding basins which catches the rain water that soaks through the ground and then is later pumped back up for drinking water etc. These ponding basins have Canadian geese and already as you drive around you see families swimming in them. These little ones are really very cute sandwiched between their parents on the ponds, and streams..

Hi Night Crowd. I have been wanting to see if you could identify a special flower I have but the bud hasn't opened yet. Hope it does before the owls leave us. In the meantime I have another one to see if you can identify as I am pretty sure all you clever gardeners will know the answer to this one.

A poignant story in our local paper today - an ongoing series about veterans. A 92 yr. old woman and her 89 yr. old sister in a nearby town found out a few years ago that a Dutch maintenance worker had been putting flowers on their brother's grave in the Netherlands for the past several years. Their brother was a pilot in WW II and was shot down flying over the English Channel in 1943. The Dutch have a program for "adopting" an American grave and all 8,300 gravesites there have been "adopted". Just another example of people doing good things for others.

Just in case tonight they all decide to enjoy their freedom. I'm so thankful:
-that we never had to see a kitty or someone's chihuahua brought to the box
-that all of the owls remained healthy and active
-that Carlos & Donna were such wonderful, smart, enthusiastic, gracious, and talented hosts
-that all the online friends are kept us informed, enlightened, laughing, and awed
-that my online owl friends are talented, fun-loving, and as crazy about the owls as I am!

They actually conserve energy that way and if I remember the word correctly, they have a unihemispheric brain (sp?) Anybody have a better explanation? Basically they can have half the brain alert while the other half sleeps I think is what it means

Birds Legs have an adaptation called "rete mirabile" that minimizes heat loss. The arteries that transport warmblood into the legs lie in contact with the veins that return colder blood to the bird's heart. The arteries warm the veins. By standing on one leg a bird reduces by half the amount of heat lost through unfeathered limbs.

One reason is to keep the tucked-up leg warm; they don't have a lot of blood flow to their legs to keep them warm. Since they can do that to keep their leg warm, they get good at it, and it's suspected that they may also do it to just rest their leg

I once got in "huge" trouble at a friend's house -- I put together that they had 1) a gas stovetop with "flame" burners and 2) marshmallows. My Girl Scout training immediately kicked in, and I masterminded the plot to roast marshmallows over the burners. (Didn't take into account the "mess" factor, not to mention the "could've burned down the house" possibility.)

Albarnach was a featured performance at a summer music festival I volunteer with every year. The Festival for the Eng. I am a 10 year veteran photographer for the festival. See the photos from last year here. Albarnach was a big hit at the event last year, they really set the tempo for the two days they performed and they drew in people from all across the park. The rhythmic beats and bagpipes could not be denied. It was great. I also had time to speak with them several times over the two days and they were really very nice people, explaining a lot about their culture and why they chose to tour with what they practice.

Very nice - will check your website out in a few. Also have to look up the craft of "chain maille". I can see from your work what it is, but not the technique. I could only associate chain maille with suits of armor, etc. when I first read it 😊

DONE!!!! Apologies to those of you who are tired of the quilt pictures, but I am so glad to get this done tonight I had to post it. I thought our friend's baby was due at the end of June but DH mentioned on Thursday that he's due June 1st. Yikes! So I've been cutting and sewing off and on all weekend, whenever I wasn't painting the patio (that's all done too, except for some trim). I even managed to make a stuffed dog to match the quilt! Woo hoo! Sadly, this busy weekend didn't leave much time for owls and all y'owl.

Yes, olbiddle, it's machine pieced and quilted. Very sturdy and washable for lots of hard use by baby. Some of the quilting is free motion but with the minkee backing I don't dare get too fancy because it stretches a bit. That's OK - babies don't really appreciate detailed stitchwork. They just like soft and minkee is as close to baby owl down as soft gets.

Hope everyone had a nice Memorial Day. Here in Rock Hill, SC it has rained and lightened all day with a couple of hard down pours and some flash flooding. But being a veteran I did my part with honoring those that have lost their lives for us. If our world could be as peaceful as watching these owls grow we sure would be (you fill in what goes here).

Experiencing an odd event here in eastern New England today. Prevailing winds are carrying smoke from massive fires in Canada. What would've been a mostly clear day was instead quite hazy. And the air does, indeed, smell of wood smoke.

For 15 years we had a blue heron sit in a cedar tree 20 feet right of our deck. My husband had a web cam but it had to "refresh" every 10 seconds. We called the heron "Cabo". He would sit all day long from September through March. Now there is a rookery about 1/2 mile away with about 17 nests.

A heron rookery is a site to behold when they are nesting and have fledglings. We used to have a large rookery which was about a 3 mile hike from the lakeshore on the lake our cabin is on in Maine. The babies would be hanging out over the edges of the nests. Not sure if the rookery is still there, haven't been in several years - 3 miles hike through the deep woods is beyond my stamina level now.

I once spent a week on Captiva Island, and went out very early every morning to sit at the water's edge and watch the shells roll in. For 4 days in a row a Great Blue Heron came and stood maybe 12 inches away at my side for an hour. I got to take in all her glory as she stood there silently, day after day. What an experience!! Of course, I knew she was there waiting for a handout in case I just happened to catch any fish, but in my secret life I liked to think that she came to share some good silent company with me.

I think so! I've noticed in the last couple of weeks what starts out looking like preening ends up looking like nipping! Not all that surprising, if you think about it. They seem to be developing some sort of sense of "self" rather than being part of a unit. They need to do that in preparation for being solitary hunters out in the big world.

I promise to swap a piece of strawberry/rhubarb pie that I'm making tomorrow. Just caught up on chat, watched a few of thevids and saved the URLs of others to view later. I have a continuing Word documents of websites, etc. that's now probably 15 pages long and I really need to get my Moly the Owl folder of saved pictures in some sense of order. Jan, I posted comments to this effect earlier this afternoon, and was roundly pounced upon for doubting whether the gender of our owlets could be determined by the color of their feathers. Like you, I had also understood that sexing at their current age by feather color and patterns was an inexact science at best. Doesn't matter. I'm as much charmed by boy owls as I am by girl owls!

Impossible to count the little ones in the Wood Duck nest, but the caption mentions that "about" 12 eggs were laid. Hard to believe they will be out of there 18 hours after hatching. I'm sure she needs to get them into their natural water environment as soon as possible.

Never did get my roast dinner ... Just dishing up and heard Carlos on air, so threw it back in oven. Started to dish up again and had long phone call. Potatoes then like owl pellets so decided to go to the local chippy which was shut for bank holiday. Ended up with a sausage sarnie.

Will most likely get hung drawn and quartered by Dave the buzzard man for idle chat 😊 but at least that will save wasted dinners.

Am now going to put some dog food out for my resident hedgehog and go to bed so that I see some flying in the morning before it's all over 😊

 From what he said a short time ago this afternoon, it sounded like he might be considering it - "maybe". There has been a lot of interest in one and he was going to talk to Eric and Chris for their input as they have more experience in the publishing aspect . Also mentioned picking out the best of the pictures and getting their input on captions. Sounded somewhat hopeful to me ???

 Someone is going to have to educate me - again LOL!! What are: Collards, Rutabagas and Høecakes???

Mary Carroll
 Oh dear,
 Collards are a leafy green served cooked. It is in the cabbage family but not near as stinky.
 Rutabagas are a yellow turnip. They are popular in Scotland and Scandinavia. They are also known as "swedes"
 Høecakes are a cornmeal fritter cooked in a small amount of fat. Think thick cornmeal pancake. They are really good.
 If you Google the names, you will find out more than you ever wanted to know about each of them.

 I don't know what he's using as a guideline, but there's a good PDF on the Barn Owl Trust site that goes into a fair amount of detail. Max is large and has a lot of dark coloring, especially on the chest and sides of the head. The chest speckles are really large, like matchhead size (which was specifically mentioned in the PDF).
 Today, 14:21:19 – Flag – Like – Reply

Elliott
 But the operating theory all along (and the research has demonstrated) that the coloring is not definitive until the owls reach full adulthood around age one year. The literature states clearly that both sexes retain dark coloring and spotting until maturity for purposes of camouflage. Carlos has always agreed with that. That is why I am confused by his sudden decision to assign a gender to Max.
 Today, 14:24:00 – Flag – Like – Reply

 He recently saw another reference that contradicted all of that. Again, I wink, since the experts themselves are all confused. 😊

Someone was asking about how far away M&M's children would go (the question is in the basement but I can't find it). I found this a good site to explain about Barn Owls

Email Eric Behm eric@ericbbehm.com to express your interest in purchasing one. If he gets enough support for a hard cover book, he will take that interest to a publishing company and may be able to get the book printed in hard cover.

Even Eric Behm's book turned into a hard copy, would make great gifts, also. I do not think they all realize how all of this has taken off, thanks to the generosity and sincerity of the Royals for enriching so many lives with their generous sharing of this wonderful adventure. Great people all around ...

Something about Austin putting together a DVD, I guess about the whole experience. He is graduating next year and if the DVD is professional he can sell it to earn $ for his school.

I think he said that Austin's making a DVD of the owls for a school project and if it's successful, he can sell them with the money going to his college. I think.

Austin's final tech project was to broadcast the picnic. We all hope he gets an A. He did it with a laptop and only had battery. The sound was not so great at times, but no complaints here. Austin said they had just enough people there. Everyone was able to speak and meet one another.

Austin is going to do an documentary of the owls for his int ernship in film making/television (?) course in school and the proceeds will go to the school. It would be a great feather in his cap also for his portf olio.

Briefly- Austin is making a DVD of this whole experience as part of an internship. Carlos said if it was of professional quality he would allow Austin to sell them. All money would go to Austin to cover his expenses and his college fund. Austin is a senior and off to college next year.

I wonder if Carlos will clean out the owl box once they are all gone. Or do they wait for another owl "couple" to hatch another set of owlettes? Or do the children aka owlettes clean out the box.

Molly and McGee survived on their own when they left their nests and their parents for good. The offspring M&M had are just following in their footsteps, or wing flaps!

You can print it out, but only once. So, if you want to have it printed in color and bound at Kinko's for instance, you have to let them be the ones to print it out.
