Dear Morning Friends,
Once again I have to say goodbye for a while. Last weekend was my college reunion, and now I'm about to get together with five friends from high school, some of whom I have known since kindergarten, and all whom I have known since at least the second grade! We have rented a house on Lake Backshear in my home state of Georgia, and I can't wait to see them all again. I leave tomorrow and will be gone for more than a week, so I fear when I return, the owlets and most you will have scattered to far off places of your own. If that's the case, I want you to know I have enjoyed spending the past 3 months with you, and I will fondly remember you and this experience from now on.

Last night when all traces of dusk were gone and the sky was fully black, Max returned from his day of solitude, flew to the top of the owl box, briefly alighted, then flew off again. Shortly after that, he returned and Pattison exited the box to fly away with him. A full twenty minutes later, Austin left the box, immediately followed by Wesley. All four owlets flew around last night and were often out of sight for long periods of time. One owl or another hung out in or near the box throughout the night, however, and kept up the owlets' familiar wistful nighttime call to each other and to Molly and McGee. Here's a screen shot of Wesley and two siblings around midnight PDT last night. Wes is the one on the right with all the fluff still evident on his abdomen.

Morning, all! Has Carlos been on yet, this am? I missed all the excitement, I guess. I just couldn't drag myself out of bed any earlier this am- I am so sore from all the playing yesterday. I was a bit sad to see that Max stayed out yesterday, and I guess it's looking like another one may be staying out today, huh? I'm going to be more sad than I thought when all have left, gauging by my reaction to Max being gone. Well, I guess I'll enjoy these last few days!

I think the first three are female and have tried to leave the nest - but Wesley is the only male and is used to being babied and waited on - true to form.
So it is taking him longer to leave the nesting box. But Moly will get him trained sooner or later. His empty tummy will take over. 😊

Carlos said that he saw all four flying last night so the treat count may not be accurate as we don't know what happened outside the range of the camera. Don't like to see Wes go hungry but he can easily survive for a day without food and there's still over an hour before daylight for him to get fed. It may be a lesson in survival from the parents.

Actually, the real question was whether the person who drew the cartoon could copyright the cartoon for selling on t-shirts or something. Guess she'll have to look into that if she wants to, but it doesn't seem to me to be a problem. She is the actual artist who drew the cartoons. 😊 Again, my opinion.

Who knows? Maybe Wes goes back into that empty box and is trying to figure if it could be his/her territory. Everyone else has had to leave the group and find his/her future "space." Wes has got more and more space opening up by staying put.

I'm considering it to be normal variation in rate of development, magnified by the fact that as the last one in the box, he might be getting fed more and better than if he were outside the box, and therefore the box is attractive. I think he's well within normal ranges with his timing. And, as I recall, Max and Pattison actually were ahead of the "normal" schedule.

I really don't think there is a problem with the pictures themselves, they could be any owls and are very individual. My question would be the reference to the owls in the OwlBox. I did a cartoon for fun, but wouldn't try to copyright it for that reason (not that mine was good enough anyway). This one is much better. Like I said, I am not an expert by any means. There are people selling Molly and McGee stuff on CafePress, but I'm not sure that they have a right to.

But the only reference is putting the names Max, Austin, Pat tson, and Wesley. That isn't the name of the book, the website, or anything else. And Carlos can't copyright the names alone. People can still use those names. Even Molly would still probably be OK. Just not "Molly the Barn Owl". But one can always talk to an attorney if one cares. It really doesn't matter as far as the wikis concerned because there is no money to be made here. It will only matter if she chooses to suelit and then she can consult an attorney if she likes.

But, is putting it on the wiki giving it away? I'm kidding but only half kidding. The internet turns copyright on its head and Carlos' proclamations about it are a bit draconian and out of step with that.

The owlets aren't cartoons. Carlos didn't invent them. He broadcast them and promoted the event. And he named them. But I don't know that he can claim rights to the likeness of the owls themselves. Worth investigating. I suppose, just to be sure.

It might be perfectly fine, I really don't know. Doing things for free and fun is what we have all been doing. When you start talking about copyrighting things, ....that just makes me a bit nervous. Just because I am not an attorney and I don't know exactly what we can do with that.

Love the cartoon, but probably can't copyright anything from the owl box (especially with naming the owls). The pictures themselves you may be able to. They are very individual..... maybe if there were no reference to this event. What do you guys think?

Personal names aren't copyrighted, unless you make them into a trade name. It doesn't refer to the owlbox or Molly even. I think it's fine. Being inspired by something doesn't prevent an artist from making their own art. I don't think.

Coleen, hope I didn't come out sounding too harsh. I just really don't think it is a problem. Cartoons are made of famous people all the time, and as long as they aren't slanderous, there isn't a problem. And first names are just too common to be able to make a claim on them. The screenshot photos are another matter because Carlos generates the video. It would be like videotaping or taking screen shots of CNN and reselling it to someone else. You can't do that, or if you do you have to pay royalties. It's just my opinion, but I admit it's a strong one. Hope that's OK. 😊

Awww, I've rescued a number of birds from window strikes. It's so sad when they don't make it. 😊 The preventatives I use and suggest to others are to move feeders closer/farther away from windows (if any, depending on where they're located in relation to windows), turning blinds, hanging plants/chimes/other items strategically outside (if possible), and window decals.

Back after spending the evening with the family. Played games, saw Iron Man 2, and watched a STNG episode "Darmok". Now a little time with you all and the owls before bed.

Our daughter is finally old enough to enjoy watching them with us, so it is something that we can now do as a family. The newest movie also helped to get her interested. 😊 Both my husband and I have always been fans, but my husband knows so much of the trivia and can tell you the name of the original series episodes within 30 seconds of it starting, or from the music. 😊

That is great! My hubby is also a big fan, but he only started watching the original series in syndication later on. I have him beat in that I watched the original series during its original run. 😊 Our teenagers enjoy the ST movies also; and I think the new movie helped to get the younger people interested. It was good but not the same. Oh well I could go on and on!

After that first flurry of activity, then Molly (or McGee) arrived with a rabbit and handed it off to someone, who did something with it and did they take it into the box? No wait. Then there was the tease where somebody landed on the roof with a treat and took off again! Then probably Austin or maybe Patti went back into the box with Wes and came out again and then Wesley came out and went up to the roof and back to the platform and took off to the west and then came back and went in the box. Something like that??

as night blanketed the sky with darkness
as the tree branches sway in the wind
as a tiny face peeks out of the owl box
we watch,
fascinated,
as an owl spreads their dappled wings
and as it launches out into the darkness
we see it return with prey clamped in its beak
just to tease its siblings,
it flies away
later it returns
and we applaud its marvelous catch
soon all take flight with one ahead
--our hopes go with you max and siblings--

Night all - early for me (11:30 in the NE). My fingers are cramping up & I ache all over from raking, bending and planting a 3 ft. x 70 ft. flower garden with annual seeds today. Not to mention the pencil eraser-sized purple, itchy welts around my eyes & ears along the hairline, around my ankles at sock top level, etc. from the ABOMINABLE Maine black flies (and you think chiggers are bad 😊). Repellent with lots of DEET is the only thing that keeps them at bay for a couple of hours and I hate having to use the stuff (but I do). So a long, hot shower and bed is in order for me. Will catch up on happenings in the morning.

Molly needs to make her little calling sounds and then they might decide to come out.

What I thought I saw: On OB2, an owl flew into view, landed the platform-ledge on the right, turned around there, then an owl came to the door, looked out, and took off and flew away. Anybody else?

Good evening everyone from Arizona. So glad to be back & reading posts. So much catching up. Did check the stats this morning & saw that Max did not return. Have been thinking about Max a bit today. Hoping Max is nearby w/M&M somewhere. Personally, I am glad to have our house quiet again and to be able to be back here and hope to watch as this wonderful story continues to unfold before our eyes. So good to be back here. Feeling a little sad too in the sense that the chats could possibly come to an end in the near future unless someone has figured out a way for everyone to meet on-line again? Happy viewing tonight and hoping to see Max/Maxine rejoin the owlets to at least hang out. Sort of like all of us do here each and every day and/or night we can. Hope everyone had a good holiday weekend!

Hi AZ, Carlos said that the chat room would continue after the owlets have all left (although that's his main one, maybe someone will talk to Sportsman's Paradise to see if we, too, could continue?) It is, also according to Carlos, Maxie. He thinks, with help from some owl experts, that there are two males and two females, and that Maxie and Wesley are the girls. Westla? Wesleyann? I know, I think we're all a bit sad at the big changes ahead (well, happening, really). But Merritt's Gest Syndrome happens. I've had it for two years now, and the pain eases with time 😊. (my son would say I'm nuts.) This silence feels weird, though, gotta say....

Maybe I am now with these owlets - who knows! 😊😊 Again, thanks for the update. Appreciate it!

Don't get into "sexes of the owls" discussions because I'm not sure so correct me if I heard wrong - but I think Carlos said in his early evening update that Austin and Pattison were most likely males and Max and Wesley most likely females.

I have said since they were little there were 2 boys ans 2 girls. I did read that if they were white, they would always be so, so therefore males. The tawny/rufus color for camouflage can mot into white later. So I do think Max & Wesley are females and Pattison & Austin are males.

Does anyone remember the book, All I Ever Needed to Know I Learned In Kindergarten by Robert Ludham. It's a great little book filled with truth, written in the 70's or 80's. Anyway, I took off with All I Ever Needed to Know I Learned from an Owl Box.
1. Open your heart and your home. You will find real joy.
2. Parents, be consistent with your children. Give them shelter from harm, food when they need it, meaningful conversation, and unconditional love.
3. Children, remember that every living thing has a purpose on this earth. It is your job to find it, yours.
4. Learn from the obstacles. Bette taught us to be wary of sharp twigs later.

As much as I have loved being here, I probably will not. I have a theater mentality. When the show is over, you strike the set, have a party, and everybody goes their separate ways. Some people you stay in touch with, but not all. Theater people are happy to have been together and are usually delighted by the experience, but are also eager to move on to the next exciting thing. That may come as a surprise to some, but that is how I have always been.

Our Fresno Ca area is very flat so to catch water for everyone they have ponding basins which catches the rain water that soaks through the ground and then is later pumped back up for drinking water etc. These ponding basins have Canadian geese and already as you drive around you see families swimming in them. These little ones are really very cute sandwiched between their parents on the ponds, and streams..

I know, I know Canada Geese are beautiful. - but I'm sure glad that water is filtered through the ground before being pumped back up as drinking water. A report a few years ago said that each adult goose creates 7 pounds of po - - (droppings) every day.

A poignant story in our local paper today - an ongoing series about veterans. A 92 yr. old woman and her 89 yr. old sister in a nearby town found out a few years ago that a Dutch maintenance worker had been putting flowers on their brother's grave in the Netherlands for the past several years. Their brother was a pilot in WW II and was shot down flying over the English Channel in 1943. The Dutch have a program for "adopting" people doing good things for others.

It's too sad that they are leaving us!!!! I know they are probably excited to get out of the box, I am happy for them but really sad for all of us. I will never forget the beautiful experience and the owls we fell in love with! I pray for their safety and may they have many many little owlets!!

I was thinking that after so many weeks of owl scat and pantry leftovers, it must be getting pretty ripe in there. Probably nature's way of ensuring they want to leave...

They actually conserve energy that way and if I remember the word correctly, they have a unihemispheric brain (sp ?) Anybody have a better explanation? Basically they can have half the brain alert while the other half sleeps I think is what it means Birds Legs have an adaptation called "rete mirabile" that minimizes heat loss. The arteries that transport warmblood into the legs lie in contact with the veins that return colder blood to the bird's heart. The arteries warm the veins. By standing on one leg a bird reduces by half the amount of heat lost through unfeathered limbs.

One reason is to keep the tucked-up leg warm; they don't have a lot of blood flow to their legs to keep them warm. Since they can do that to keep their leg warm, they get good at it, and it's suspected that they may also do it to just rest their leg

I once got in "hugs" trouble at a friend's house -- I put together that they had 1) a gas stovetop with "flame" burners and 2) marshmallows. My Girl Scout training immediately kicked in, and I masterminded the plot to roast marshmallows over the burners. (Didn't take into account the "mess" factor, not to mention the "could've burned down the house" possibility.)

Albarnach was a featured performance at a summer music festival I volunteer with every year. The Festival for the Eng. I am a 10 year veteran photog for the festival. See the photos from last year here. Albarnach was a big hit at the event last year, they really set the tempo for the two days they performed and they drew people from all across the park. The rhythmic beats and bagpipes could not be denied. It was great. I also had time to speak with them several times over the two days and they were really very nice people, explaining a lot about their culture and why they chose to tour with what they practice.

If you can sew, you CAN do them. The pattern includes full-size pattern pieces for each piece (some of the hummingbirds took 12-13 different pieces each). Fusible web is easy to work with - although different directions for various brands. I'll try to find a website for her patterns - some are discontinued and there are lots of new ones.
