Well, I am back from my trip. Got 4 hours of sleep after I got home at 8:30 am so sort of rested 😊 I see I missed Max and Pattison leaving. I had an interesting trip no electric, so no water as there is a well. Fun times. We saw lots of nature as my dd phrased it. A few of our finds

Yes, it was a long drive and hard work. DH spent the time from son up to sundown working hard. He said he was glad to get back to work, poor guy. It was really nice to be back there but just makes me long to live there again. So if anyone knows anyone who wants to invest a bunch of money in a 1700's house and farm so I can buy it from my family and turn it into a farm with a B&B or restaurant before a developer buys it and destroys this historic home and fantastic land. Please send them my way.

With all of that beauty, who needs electric, water, etc. WOW, beautiful, homeschool. We have a cabin on a nearby lake - no electric (gas lights and ref. rig), no running water (except and old-fashioned hand pump from a brook) - but acres of lake and a path to lug water in), no TV, no telephone, etc. The perfect place to "listen to the quiet". Wonderful photos. Thanks.

A couple of links from our "quilt show" last evening. The first is for the McKenna Ryan site for her patterns (unfortunately, many of her earlier ones have been discontinued) Be sure to check out "series", "classic" and "single" on her menu. The second is a link to Batiks Plus which carries many of the McKenna Ryan line of fabrics - great for backgrounds, textured looks, etc.

 Barn owls smell sweet.
 According to <http://www.mqndensl.org/feathersofhope/62/urndefined>
 "we learn another reason to appreciate barn owls—they have a lovely scent!"
 Other sources describe the Barn Owls scent as butterscotch and maple syrup (maybe they did not live in "gag shag").

He sounds a little melancholic, and yet a little relieved to be nearing the end. I'm sure the RV is being inspected and prepped for their departure as we type. 😊

This has been almost a sacred privilege to experience this Owl family and the Royals.
The timing of every aspect has been like some kind of magical clockwork...just recently, the way they have started to leave right after the picnic. It has all fallen into place like a beautiful story and I wish they would make a movie of Molly's Story...wouldn't that be great? I love all the warm people who came along for this ride. Kind people, caring people in every respect...that's what I've found. Thank you all for being here. Patty

Sugapea I've thought the same thing. A movie should be made although I'm not sure it could really capture the human connection that is part of OUR JOURNEY. FOR those I've only heard about complaining or jeabous that Carbs might be making some kind of profit from this whole thing. I would ask "Do you complain about the profit James Cameron might have made from making THE TITANIC or AVATAR?"

- I perceive Carlos as a successful businessman with a generous heart. He has provided expensive equipment and sacrificed long hours every day, and postponed his own vacation just for us to be able to see this miracle to the final fledge. Wouldn't we all feel like we got a bargain if we paid him directly ($5 or $100) for the sheer enjoyment we've had the last few months? kathleen

The first night that Max didn't go back into the box, it may have been Pattison that stood outside of the door for the longest time looking around as though he were looking for Max to get back to the box. Then he (Pattison) went in. Makes you wonder if they do sense these things. I imagine anyone else that was watching it that morning, could have felt it also. So glad to hear that Max may have been with the group last night flying around.

Like Owl stated and he will again if you listen when he comes on, to update us all, we have his permission to print and save pictures for our own personal use, but not to sell or give to others. He is looking into selling individual pictures, hopefully like the ones he had matted and framed for the picnic, Saturday. He is looking into a possible book of photos, Eric Blehm is looking into it as he has told Carlos that he would gladly write the commentary to the photos if a book can be published. On 6 June, there will be an interview with Eric Blehmand I think perhaps Christopher Adams (the illustrator for Eric's ebook) Hopefully we will find out more then, I think he said 2pm PDT, please correct me if I am wrong. he also mentioned another interview of John Atkinson, the creator of the cartoon strips and the owl shirt print. I missed the date and time on that one, but stay tune and it will Pop-Up.

In a sense, yes. They often follow noises around that are most likely happening outside the box. I suspect that the box amplifies (or resonates with) certain curious sounds coming through the wood, much like the annoying bass thumping we hear in the evenings, just more in tune with what owls are designed to hear - high frequency rustling sounds.

I heard him say that - so if the box were so inadequate - now that they have room - they would be spreading out - if that was what they really wanted to do all along - no?

I think I read that when they nest in cliffs they like caves that go back at least 3 feet. I doubt they would find a hole that deep in a tree so in my opinion the design of this box is somewhere on the short end of the cave preferences. I have no idea if that is significant or not but I think even if the other eggs

My gallery of screen captures and manipulations will remain right here: http://bit.ly/JH-Molly-Gallery

I am working on a slideshow to place on the Molly Wiki. I'll update here after that is done, sometime tonight or tomorrow.

I do still need decent captures from when they were eggs/very small. I didn't begin to capture decent screenshots until they were fairly big. Anyone with nice captures from the early days, please let me know how to get access to them.

The mom may be trying to coax the Hummer out of the nest... Live Hummingbird Nest

She has been returning and nudging the little one from inside the nest, from behind and alongside. She also has been taking very short flights around the nest and returning to sit beside the little one, in between feedings.

This is the first hummer nest I've observed to the end. Does anyone know if they leave for good after that first flight, like many birds, or will the young return to the nest for a few days?

"Once hummingbirds fledge, they wait for their parents in a distinct spot that is usually not far from the nest. They do not follow their parents around as they forage, but rather wait to receive food. Once the female fills her crop with nectar, small insects and spiders she returns to feed her young. Time to fledging: 18 to 22 days
Time to independence: 58 days (average)"

This live cam habit has grown! First (and most) it was Molly's family, then the Africa site, then the beautiful Tawny Owls, then the humming birds, with a few ducks thrown in for nest-leaping fun! When am I actually supposed to get any work done? LOL

Everytime that little hummingbird stands on the edge of the nest and flaps it's wings in a blur I hold my breath...

Normally my DESKTOP is neat and orderly with a single vertical row of folders on the right. Now then entire screen is f'ed up with screen shots. My second screen is full of unread and unanswered emails and is covered up with the AVATAR COLLAGE I'm working on. Funny to start noticing how many ways the MOD has affected my life in so many ways. "Hubby?" Who's he? Cats, well...they're fed join me for coffee in the AM. TV? Kinda boring. Kathleen

I am reading a book about Barn Owls. The next few weeks are really critical for the young owlets because they need to learn to dodge hawks, cars and power lines, don't eat poisoned critters and all the things M&M did to live to breed. The book says only 1 out of 15 fledglings live to year 2. I hope M&M's babies beat the odds.

LOL - No need to apologize to me - My feathers are not the ones ruffled, as should be apparent by the lack of excessive exclamation marks in my response. But looking at your history, I see you do have a persistent fear of Wesley somehow being maimed. Questions/statements like yours (with the multiple exclamation points, for some apparent reason) are what keeps the pilot-light lit under a lot of other "natural born worriers". No need to add fuel to that fire without cause. Those of us who are here regularly then have to refute rumors long after the casual worrier is gone.

(Still not ruffled, just rational)

Pat, Wesley is the biggest owlet of them all, he/she has been out of the box, flapping, jumping, hopping and skipping, and has taken off into the wild dark yonder quiet a few times. What is there to worry about? Go read the summaries and daily updates on wiki and molly/sbox blog. Perhaps you need to talk to your personal physician about your worrying, it is not healthy. 😞 We want you to stay healthy like the wee raptors we have been watching for months, now.

I don't want to miss an opportunity to bid you adieu. Thank you for your welcoming spirit. Carlos and Donna are at the center for making this experience possible. Moly's family is the next concentric circle, then Merritt, Owlosaurus, James, Lynda C, Ruth, Becky and many others who formed a framework for thousands to branch from like a complex molecule. I've unhooked from my "news junkie" tendencies and don't miss that stress a bit. This experience has been life-changing. To take the time to watch an entire cycle of nature collapsed in 3 months is extraordinary. To feel joined with so many people in similar awe and spirit gives me wings. So I thank each of you for allowing me to share this journey with you, (not that I'm leaving yet).

Good morning from Berkeley, CA - I too amsaddened and thrilled to see our owlets grown and flying into their new life. I would love to read Owlsausus's poem if anyone can direct me to it. Also, while I was researching the life span of barn owls it was noted that the longest known wild barn owl lived 34 years!!! Let's hope M&M thrill us with a return next year. We have enjoyed a family of owls every year for the past 4-5 years and we think it is from the same pair. My love to all of my owl mates. 😊

I mentioned this performance yesterday and didn't find the link again until late last evening. <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=H13RqgJ1M> - a young girls playing "Taps" at an Andre Rieu performance. "Taps" always brings a tear, but I don't think I have ever heard it performed so so beautifully.

Just checking in for a quick visit. Haven't read much of the morning chat, but can see that many are expressing their thoughts about this adventure and others are starting to say their goodbyes in anticipation of the end of this wonderful journey (just hope they don't REALLY leave until the "train" stops). Owosaurus, your "Farewell to Molly's First Family" was so touching and eloquently expressed not only your personal thoughts, but the thoughts of many others. It probably weigh in with a few of my own thoughts later today which will probably repeat what so many have already said.

The head bobbing is due to their eyes being fixed. They have to turn their entire head to see.

Most ly watch and occasionally post but have enjoyed all of you so much. Even if we are fortunate to be able to enjoy something like this in the future, Molly, McGee and their family will always be in our hearts. I am so much more appreciative of owls and other wildlife than I have ever been and hope crits will give the Royals credit for what they have done for all of us.

I wanted to take this moment to give Carlos and his family my sincerest thanks for providing such a unique and heartwarming experience to a bunch of strangers. This journey has been truly amazing. From flight to flight!

Spring is the busiest and most stressful time of year for my business and it was a blessing to have Molly and her brood up on my monitor at work. Whenever things got too insane, I would take a few moments to check up on our babies and know that all was right with the world.

Thank you, thank you and thank you again! Your work and effort were truly a blessing to me!

I read some interesting discussions about copyright in the PDF from last night. Seems there is a lot of confusion, and some misinformation being shared among some of our resident contributors about what can and can not be done with personal artwork created around the Moly/Owlets phenomenon. It's impossible to clearly define what's right and wrong in the limited space available here (and I'm no expert) but I thought I'd share some useful links to help people understand what's factual and what's not.

What I heard him say was basically - we'll cross that bridge when we come to it. I'm sure he is tired, and wanting to go back to living his life again! Maybe after their trip, and some good rest, he'll feel better about the thought of broadcasting again. This is probably a once in a lifetime event. I've so enjoyed it, but I am sad to see it coming to an end.

Farewell to Moly's First Family (part 1)
It started with an email from a friend:
He said there was a website not to miss.
A pair of owls with 5 eggs left to tend,
The mother nesting in a state of bliss.

I had no expectation that this site
Would steal my life for months, both nights and days.
But Moly looked at me that fateful night
And I was drawn into her restless gaze.

I watched as one by one 4 owlets hatched
So fluffy as they huddled under wing!
Their father's hunting skills could not be matched
Survival hinged upon food he'd bring.

McGee and Moly made a perfect pair.
With MOE chatters and lunkers always there.

Farewell to Moly's First Family (part 2)
So much has happened since that sweet March day;
Events and friends I will not soon forget.
No accident it was, so I can say:
I chose to spend my time with no regret.

We came to love their antics as they grew.
And their harsh cries became our nightly song.
That they would leave one day we always knew:
They branched, then flew and our hearts went along.

We wish you well along your paths of flight
Safe comfort in your days and treats at night!

Molly and McGee are not bringing food into the box anymore. This is causing the owls to leave the box. Last night there was a food fight as a rodent was brought to the landing pad. Three wanted it but only one got it and there was no sharing. All were fed but a new way of getting Wesley and Austin out of the box has begun. It was good to see all the owls together last night. I think Max will be around the box less and less. Pattison is also not sleeping in the box today. Carbs said the fuzz on Wesley shows that he is not ready to do a lot of flying yet.

Good afternoon and thanks for all the pictures and summaries 😊 . It's very strange to see the box so empty 😞 . I can still only see Wesley, hoping to see another as it gets lighter.

Dear Morning Friends,
Once again I have to say goodbye for a while. Last weekend was my college reunion, and now I'm about to get together with five friends from High school, some of whom I have known since kindergarten, and all whom I have known since at least the second grade! We have rented a house on Lake Backshear in my home state of Georgia, and I can't wait to see them all again. I leave tomorrow and will be gone for more than a week, so I fear when I return, the owlets and most you will have scattered to far off places of your own. If that's the case, I want you to know I have enjoyed spending the past 3 months with you, and I will fondly remember you and this experience from now on.

Hi Merritt, While I am mostly on in the evening I have been checking the status of how many owlets are left, etc. I am glad I did check this a.m. as I got to see your nice note. I hope you have a wonderful girls week away and how much fun it will be for all of you. It has been great knowing you here and reading your posts, etc. I am hopeful that somehow we can all be in a chat area after the owlets have all flown off to begin their own lives. You and everyone else here have always made any new people in the chat feel welcome. Having never been in a chat room before, this has been a wonderful experience and you have added greatly to that experience. Take care, have fun and hope to see you again this evening and also upon your return.
Best always to you Merritt!
