                  Well, all 4 accounted for. Three enjoying the evening sky and Austin (I think) kicking back inside.

                  Okay, one more try. We are having heavy storms (much needed) here in Houston. My computer is messing up although I am on cable. Lights are flickering off and then on. If it happens again, goodnight and I will see you all tomorrow. xoxo

                       Ya know, when Wesley finally decides to move outside, she is going to be the biggest, baddest owl on the block, and possibly the fattest.

It's a good themfor them that they are maturing and going on to better things. But it's sad for us that we'll probably never see them again after they are all off and flying around not to return to their "home" box. I'm heading for bed. Good night everyone..

Those were done by Colleen. I think she has gone for the night, but would probably love to see your comment. I asked her tonight if there would be a 3rd one and she said yes when she is inspired to do it. Aren't they wonderful?? Hope you checked out the other things on the wiki site.

Hello everyone! I just returned from Savannah, GA visiting my sister. We had a wonderful family reunion and I sure enjoyed my week with her.

Góða nótt eveyone. Have started to doze off at the computer twice already. Time to hit the hay. Willcheck back later in the morning.

Christina Sigvertsen Podv in Ok, so I was in the basement for a bit and lost everything, tried it again and then missed saying good night to several peeps... I give up (hands in the air)!

Did I miss an exciting exit or reunion with kids? I know I just missed a wabbit (hate when that happens)! Lots of pet pictures tonight.

Well, I've updated the wiki Timeline almost to the minute and need to get to bed. We've got a day-long, off-site meeting tomorrow. I'd rather watch Austin and Wes! That is, unless they never mind. Hey, if they leave tomorrow and roost in the palm tree, too, maybe Carlos will point OB2 there! And, it just occurred to me, those pics of Max and Patti in the palm tree look just like Carlos' shirt!

Night, everyone. Keep the owl watch burning and leave word. <3

                   Here is how to bring the owl(s) back into the picture. Log off or go onto another site and instantly you will hear screeching. However, if you are not quick enough, you will miss the said owl(s). At least that is how it is for me. Not sure about everyone else. I know there are a few lucky ones by seeing the pics.

I was part of a rescue programme where owls unable to fly could breed and their offspring (unimprinted by humans) were released to the wild. Others were taken to schools to educate youngsters . The look on their faces when the held an owl was priceless \stackrel{f \cup}{}

                          That is so great. Is it really true that you cannot rebuke an owl because the owl would feel threatened?

If I had hand reared one a tap on the beak would stop thembeing anti-social to the other pets. But the "wild" ones would be threatened and strike out.
                          To have your hair preened by an owl is quite an experience \stackrel{ullet}{=} were just being nice and sending me some. 😃 They were in an odd format, so I had to change them to make them viewable. Guess that's why you

                          I've heard that rabbits can scream like humans when attacked by raccoons. Fortunately my sound was out during this poor rabbit's demise.

                    To finish my comment I started about people feeling sad:
                    I am not sad, perhaps a bit pensive about it ending, but not sad. I know I can go back and read the chatstream PDFs and relive some of the laughs and read some laughs I hadn't seen yet. They ARE fun to read, believe me! Plus all the poetry, Haiku/Horku and photos all gathered. We'll have this incredible place to go and relive the memories whenever we want! Thank you ALL for being the contributors, and to the special folks who "maintain" the wiki. (((HUGS!)))

                          One owl came in from the south and landed on the bar. Another owl came from the south but flew over out of sight.
                           Austin came out and went directly off screen to the right.
                           Wesley finally came out and immediately flew down to the right out of sight.

                                Hard to tell which. I thought I heard Molly, too. Notice the pattern every night, though, of getting quiet after a visit? I find that interesting.

                        In addition to all the other great Molly merchandise, I heard today that there will also be an exercise video, featuring Tyto Alba, a very fit (and sexy) fitness guru. Some of the moves include the head twist (slow turn 90 degrees to the left, then 180 degrees to the right), the anabesque stretch (elongating the right armand the right leg simultaneously while maintaining perfect balance; repeat on the other side), and the famous flying-flapping long jump (jumping onto your partner's mat while raising and lowering your arms rapidly; add arm weights for additional results!). Results are guaranteed, although you may find yourself sleeping a little more during the day. Check it out today!

  Carlos called themQueen Ann Palm trees... I have only been to Ca. once, but do remember them. The ones Colleen were thinking of are probably coconut trees.

Carlos sounds tired tonight as well he should be. He came on and chatted very early CA time and had lots of things to get done today or try to get done. He deserves his planned vacation. They have both worked so very hard. This a.m. he mentioned that he had spent approx. $8K on the camera and sound equipment used for this project and also mentioned that they had received something like $5,500 in donations. That is pretty good I think. So nice everyone decided to send him a little something for his dedicated efforts I think.

        Glad he has gotten that much to help defray his out-of-pocket costs to say nothing of the time he has spent as a good will ambassador to schools, etc.
           Despite some thoughts by a few in other places to the contrary, he isn't doing this to make money.

I have had that happen once before. I ended up clearing my cache and history and temp files before ever getting back in sync. Not sure what caused it but, I think it had to do with a bunch of Flash cruft building up, probably temp files Today, 19:54:09 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by Chris in Olympia, WA Kathryn R Kristi Smith

That happened to me once, but there was a small print sentence in red that said "leave a comment" or something like that...I clicked on it and it opened everything...

"Come dance with the westwind and touch all the mountaintops." Sail o're the canyons and up to the stars. And reach for the heavens and hope for the future, and all that we can be, not what we are... Listened to that while painting and thought of the owls. So who's my fav artist?

John Denver!!! Today, 19:50:18 - Flag - Like - Reply Yep. So, "...and the moon and the stars are the same one we see..." So after the owls, every time we look up and see the moon, know it's the same

I've so enjoyed reading all the posts. Maybe i'll check out some of the other wildlife webcams sometimes to see if any of you are watching and posting. I'm just so thankful to Carlos and Donna for sharing this experience with the world. I know I will be sad for awhile and really miss them and all of you. We've laughed, waited, worried, listened, and fell in love with these beautiful creatures! Wow, we've been lucky to experience this together! I know we'll never forget what we've learned and the friends we've made. I know many of us will continue chatting one way or another, even without the owls. Now, let's

Speaking of old shows (now towards the basement), does anyone remember H. R. Pufristuf? Well, I had a major crush on the boy in that show, played by Jack Wild (loved his accent too)! I met a boy in school that I thought looked like himand so I was instantly attracted to him. We will have our 30th wedding anniversary this summer (the boy from school, Wayne, not Jack Wild \stackrel{\smile}{=} ).

                            Jan, saw your reply below about staring at an empty nest and you are probably right. I just hope we might linger here for a few days to get the last pictures, memories, etc. and perhaps chat again at another web cam. I won't be going along to Facebook or the Yahoo group. I was late joining the active chat, but checked to watch several times a day since early March, so I know many of you have formed deeper bonds with each other. As much as I would dearly love to keep in touch with so many of you; for me it has been Molly and this whole experience that has been the SuperGlue that has held us together and that experience can never be duplicated.

I think they may be listening for any sounds of wing-beats. Some earlier were talking about hearing a hummer nearby and were hoping to catch a glimpse. It hink there will be many here after the last two leave, sitting, watching an empty box at dusk, hoping to hear/see an owl in the night.

Molle, you were really in a dream, weren't you?? Do you know Baudelaire's poetry? Was your dreamfigure really reciting these verses from Baudelaire?

The second of the second

                            Just an FYI for those of you who have fallen totally in love with owls and raptors ... there are raptor rehab/care centers in several states; I've been lucky enough to volunteer at 2 of them, in SC and MN. Volunteers feed and clean up after the birds, and assist vets and vet techs in exams and treatments. I have a "knack" with the surgical forceps used to hand feed raptors (I'man O. R. nurse) so I'm often recruited to hand feed birds that need some help. But here's the thing! YOU can do this too! Bird and animal rehab centers need volunteers. They will train you and appreciate you and you will have a wonderful opportunity to really help animals. If you have an extra day or 2 per month, or 4-5 hours per week, please consider volunteering at your nearest wild animal rehab facility.

                                     Jenn, I'm glad you posted that. Since falling for Molly's family my husband and I have visited our local raptor rehab center and will be volunt eering there.
                                      These barn owls got us there, but the work the center does really inspired us.

      With the way our species often behaves, I sometimes amashamed to be a human. I have to remind myself that one of the great perks of being human is the ability to watch life unfold and revel in it. Be aware of it, and appreciate it. To feel at one with the creatures around me.

      I used to think theat humans were the only species capable of compassion - now not sure but the barn owls also have it. Another one of those emotions we think we have to learn, but may be in our genome. Just waiting for the right circumstances to allow it to be unveiled

       Yes, Ang - Compassion: we put a label on it; behave as if we invented it. So much of our genome is shared with all other forms of life, it seems absurd that we lay claim to what we think of as exclusively human!

WARNING! Sleep-talking hubby story ahead!
Hubby was pretty much passed out after the ten hour drive, and I was watching the owls for the first time in a week.
He was laying there, and I heard himsay "What's that?" I didn't say anything, and a minute later, he again said:
"What IS that?". I said: "It's Wesley. He's hungry". No response, so I thought, Oh, well, no story for tomorrow. And then:
"It sounds like the brakes on my first car."

I remember some comments when I first started watching this, that the oldest owlets may eat the younger ones, or try and push them out of the nest. I almost didn't continue to watch, because I couldn't bear to witness things like that. The true story has been the total opposite. It's like the buddy system.

Ummmmmm . . . . . errrrrr -I think not. Because I WOULD clean it out. Not sanitize/ bleach or anything that would discourage new inhabitants, but most of that "stuff" is bound to be a magnet for maggots, etc. Like I said before, if I was an owl looking for a home I wouldn't mind it having a "lived in" apparance, but I'd want to bring my own blankets.

The thing that got me addicted from the first was the quality of the view - good color, good resolution, good distance and good angle. So many of them are poor quality images. I'd like to find more like that.

Agreed, Cat. It's the whole experience. Having the cameras trained on themat eye level and in color is unique. I haven't found any other nest box cams that provide anything near this experience.

                           That's the problem. Carlos is a fascinated as we all are with these owl's lives. We've had top-notch technology and his avid interest all along. It's going to be difficult to accept anything less, but with what else is available right now, we're going to have to adjust.

Beware... my husband started feeding our barn cat on the patio when I was out of town last summer (so he wouldn't have to walk to the barn).... now-she thinks she is a housecat - she was feral before.. doesn't like to be picked up or touched on her back but loves to jump up on my bed and snuggle on

Flash works just fine on firefox and on Google Chrome so I don't know what to tell you. I used firefox for a long time until I moved to Chrome around the first of the year and never had any problems with it. Can you get any of the SPO live cams? Have you tried turning off your computer and powering up
