As usual I have the computer at work watching the owls. I'll be gone for a few days, lost in the Colorado mountains in the spring where humming birds fly, elk calve and there are lots of birds. I don't expect to see these two when I get back Monday. Thanks Carbs and the gang for a good show.

Nope, no haikus or doggerel tonight.

Your chat below about tadpoles and chat the other night about fireflies brings back so many childhood memories. We used to collect tadpoles and watch them morph into frogs. Our after-dark playtime in the summer included catching fireflies and putting them into jars with holes poked in the lids (we always had to let them go before going in for the night - except the night I snuck a jar in hoping it would be a night light and my mother found it and made me take it back out). In late summer we also collected one or two Monarch buttefly chrysalises (sp?) attached to the milkweed stem and keep them in a terrarium of sorts until they emerged.

Meta.....Do you have pics on your computer and know where to find them? If so, in the box you write your post, there is a button on the bottom left... "Add images". Just click it and it will open your computer browser. Just find the pic you want to post and click on it. If you get the twirly wheel, the file is too big and will need to be resized. You can do that where your pics are stored.

Play around with it and see what you find. You may be surprised with yourself!!!

Here is a Barn owl nest link in the Netherlands. She has six owlets and lots of food in the pantry. There are two camera views and you can click on which one you want to view. It is in Dutch, and my tool bar translates it into English. On the index bar of this link in English it says Screech Owl twice, and it is wrong. The second Screech owl is actually a Barn owl. The Screech Owls are cute too. Hope you enjoy it.

 I'm not Owl, but I know what a neti pot is: it's a small ceramic or plastic pitcher that looks kind of like an Aladdin's lamp. You fill it with warm salt water and use it to wash out your nasal passages. You can buy them in any health food store, or online. In fact, google "neti pot" and you'll find lots of sources, and photos, and videos showing you how to use it. It really works!

 A couple of week ago I asked for help identifying a bird I could hear in our yard. Found out it was a grey tree frog. 😊 Then discovered it was actually a grey swimming pool cover frog. 😊 We rescued some eggs before pulling the cover off and I now have 3 tadpoles living in a container on my dining table. I was looking at them swim earlier when my son said "Oh great! Now you are obsessed with frogs?!" Well... I have to have something to watch when the owls are gone.

 My husband brought home some tadpoles and they turned into tree frogs. Enjoy!
 Put something in there for them to climb onto as they are not aquatic frogs.

 We have got gravel on one end for them to climb on when they reach that stage. When they start needing crickets and such to eat we will have to find a different arrangement.

I know my babe's more important than Wes and Austin but is this the last coir fix I'll ever get? Nobody knows. Well yes, I know the shadow knows but I wish we could know for sure.

Still hoping the sky cam that Carlos has on backorder, comes in before they leave the county. 😊

A note about the slideshow. Except for the very first image, it's random, so no two people/viewings will ever see the same sequence. Therefore, frame numbers don't help much. But all the traffic on the page does. I just checked and it is over 15,000 image views already. 😊

Hi everyone, I was watching the news tonight and am sooo angry about this "oil problem" and how it is killing the birds. I showed a couple of them soaked in oil and dying. Broke my heart. Now on a light or note our little owl family is doing great. It was so much fun last night watching them fly around in the background.

 I have mentioned this before. Hope some of you are not having to read it twice.
 My house was built in 1950's. My kitchen cabinets are light wood. In the center of the cabinets the grain of the wood are owl images. On the cabinets with two doors, one door has half of the owl and the other door has the other half.
 It's really interesting. I bought the house in 1993. I'm not sure when the cabinets were put in. If anyone is familiar as to when this type of wood was popular it may give me an idea of how old they are.
 They have really just been a staple to the house. However, now they have a purpose there. When I look at my cabinets I can think of Moly & family.

SORRY SO LONG

Okay - last sleep-taking story from last night. I'm telling you, he was on a roll! (I think it was pent-up from the week we spent away) It was right after the large delivery, and there was major screaming going on, and it sort of roused him, and he started to turn over. I said: "Sorry. They just got a rabbit for dinner".
I turned the sound down, and he turned back over. Then... from out of the pillows comes this:

"I don't want rabbit for dinner..."

Yep. He's a keeper, all right.

So I thought of an art project, which I will embark upon tomorrow.

- Step 1: Print out two copies of the picture below.
- Step 2: Cut out just the owl bodies (no legs) from one of the pictures.
- Step 3: Make a paper spring (or find a little metal one from something broken and cut it very, very short).
- Step 4: Reinforce cut-out paper bodies with some thicker card stock (an old greeting card would work!). Do the same for the background.
- Step 5: Attach the springs to the neck-ish area of each owl on the background, then to the same position on the reverse side of the cutout.
- Step 6: Put the whole thing on the part of my desk that gets the most air-conditioning "wind," and hope that it helps me once these two have gone.

I haven't been tuned in for a couple weeks. Have Max and the next one left the house? And it seems we have Austen and Wesley there now? Have we found out which ones are male and or female? Hope you can answer, I will appreciate it. Thanks. ... from upstate New York.

Yes, Max and Patti have moved out to the tree with Molly and McGee. Max and Wes are female, Patti and Austin are male.

I've wondered about Pattison because his/her breast is getting whiter. The other three are more distinct.

Interesting. I have not had the chance to observe that about Patti. Last I knew, Carlos was positing that three are female and only Austin is a male. I think the truth is (as you suggest!) there are significant individual variations and adult coloration is not established definitively until after their first moult.

Wes and Austin are in the box during the day. Max and Pattison stayed outside in a tree during the day at the neighbors house (yesterday). All four are seen together at night. It appears that Austin is the only male, because he has a white breast, but from what I've read the colors can change over the first year.

Max and Pattison are out and about, not returning to the owlbox for the day, but flying in the vicinity, hunting, and hanging out with their sibs at night. We suspect Max, Patti, and Wes are girls and Austin is a guy. But that's based on adolescent feather coloring (more buffy and spotty for females, whiter chest and neck for males.)

Finally I found my Ted Andrews Animal Speak book so I could see what he says it means when Owls enters your life. Yadda yadda yadda, it was pretty much as I expected: mystic visions, see what others don't, link you heart with your brain, take what you need and spit out the rest (symbolized by horking). But he also said the chief prey of the barn owl is the mouse (did anybody in this room not know that?), and anybody working with Owl should also investigate Mouse.

And here's where it gets interesting: "The deer mouse is good about its appearance, but it is a slobby housekeeper. This reflects that, for those with a mouse totem, there will be areas in which fastidiousness and attention to detail are highly concentrated, while in other areas there may be neglect. This paradox is often a source of confusion and sometimes irritation to those who live and work with mouse people."

Well, sure, when we're watchin' the Owl Box!

Psychologists are desperately seeking behavior modification for an epidemic known as Moly Obsessive Disorder (MOD). Timing is now critical as the last 2 owlets near their departure of the owlbox and people with MOD are faced with a new reality. MOD appears to be contagious on line. Shared were unaware of their susceptibility. MODs don't want a cure. They prefer to live with their illusion that they hold a treasure in their hearts from their shared experience. Poetry and Haiku have been written, household chores, cooking, shopping and family members have been neglected without a trace of guilt.

Honestly there is no need to worry. Wesley has been laying down to sleep quite often in her young, but closely scrutinized, life. She is delightfully healthy, but remember, they are nocturnal animals. She needs her beauty sleep before she goes out to play tonight! All is well, really!

Wesley is so funny and so different from Max, our other female. I think Max will tend to be more like Molly as a mother - carry but leaving the nest to hunt and fly with her mate. Wesley will be the momma owl who stays in the nest until the very last owl leaves! And she'll probably still be doing the Face Plant Pop when she gets sleepy. I hope the mate that finds her realizes she's going to be a high maintenance bride!

I want two framed pictures of wes and austin.
one: wes on the ground looking up, and austin perplexedly looking down two: from the other day, when austin tried to eat the giant rat, and wes perplexedly turned his/her head sidewise to watch.

the two of them mystify each other. It's adorable.

I've helped in a greyhound search and several others. The most important thing is to get the word out, and flyers everywhere is good. You need a group of people hanging them on poles, in stores, putting them on cars in parking lots, etc. Alert every vet and shelter, and put it on petfinder, in the papers... It seems they are usually found because someone saw them on a flyer and called. Every sighting needs to be checked out, even if it sounds far-fetched. A greyhound can even be found on an island in the middle of the river after two long weeks...it's true. Remember...flyer, flyer, flyer, and put them in plastic if you can, in case of rain. Sorry if you know these things already!

 A lot of people don't know how important that is. We've been on several searches, I learned so much from the first big one. My husband and I have been the ones that found several of these lost babies. Some people only put up a few signs and/or they don't put them in plastic. Many people have called us for help and ideas. Some people do not check out sightings that sound very far-fetched, I know this from experience. Just trying to help, I get very emotionally involved in these searches.

 Thanks Lynn for the advice. The owner actually had most of the flers laminated (I'm afraid to even ask how much that cost). He had banners made to hang around town (I believe they are vinyl) and he's doing mailer postcards. He has been searching all of the shelters, vets, etc. and put the word on the newspaper, email, fliers to friends to pass out, etc. Even hired a dog tracker and they believe the dog has been picked up in a vehicle because the dog lost the scent at the freeway. I've been contacting animal contrls, etc in Oregon and Washington but so far, nothing. We've also paid for another service to help with emails too.

 Stating an alternative opinion is very acceptable. Arguing and trying to force an opinion once it's stated - especially when you become insulting - is not OK. Many people here have hundreds - some even thousands - of nice, friendly posts. Not all of them stating the same opinions. You have just a few posts and most of them are not so nice. Really? Really.

 This is nothing about that old argument. I'm on the side of neither person! I'm upset that while I was trying to be a voice of reason who said lay off the bird scientist, I was flagged for it! I'm appalled and shocked. And really shocked at Elliott's semi-rude post to me.

 Okay, I normally stay out of this, but I'm going to put in MY two cents now... this site has been unique in it's welcoming and friendly nature. Opinions have been shared, and no, we have not always agreed. Like all families, we have our disagreements, but we share a common bond. We welcome all discussions, but we do not dwell on the negative or the content bus. It's not what we come here for. I respect your rights and opinions, and I hope you will do the same for me. Additionally, I do not expect this site to be what I want it to be. I try to go with the flow, enjoy the deliciousness of the miracle we are witnessing, and revel in the people I have the pleasure to chat with. And to remember that words are powerful things, and when written, may seem even more powerful than might be meant.
 The owls are the center of our world here, teaching us about the honesty, the joy, and the wisdom of what is meant to be. Enjoy it - it will be gone too soon.

James, you are AWESOME! I won't have time to look at your slideshow but I will check it out after I get home later on. (Next on to hospital to see friend, then daughter to karate, but I will be back)
So tell me James, I just read a tidbit that you met "Elen"? What's that about? Will I be forced to the basement to find out?

Good afternoon, all. I have some good news for you. 😊 No, not that news. LOL

Currently it is a work in progress, as most of the Wiki is, but there is a slideshow present, finally. The images are still uploading from my house to servers on the other side of the country and there will be updates and changes made throughout the evening. Currently it is a huge hodgepodge of images from all over and from many folks. Some are edited and others are not. I will eventually pare down the numbers by removing duplicates and any "fluffy" images. Until then, it's all over there.

Someone's dreary dreambox
I need several of you to hit the page and let the slideshow run for a little while. That will do a couple things. 1) It will force the servers at my host to optimize and cache the images in the proper size for the slideshow. 2) It will give me statistics on image views which I will then use to isolate problem images. There are several corrupt files which will not display, causing the slideshow to halt, pause, or skip over a bad image. If the slideshow pauses on you, just click the right arrow to continue on. Thanks in advance for any assistance.

Hope Austin & Wesley have good outside fun tonight and come back home in the morning. This morning was really different, Wesley went into the box and it was getting time for it to be light. I was Worried whether Austin was coming h...He came in with another owl (not sure which one) and Austin got right in the box. The other owl flew on back to the west. Wandered if it was one of the parents telling Austin he had to get into the box right away....

Oh, Joan, dear one, I am so very sorry. The heaviness your heart must feel right now can't be completely lifted by any words, but please know that you are not alone in your grief. I think I can speak for most of us here: We will pray for your Mom and for you - or send out the strongest of wishes for your strength in these hard times, or just sit quietly and think of you - whatever our inclination is, please know that we are here for you. My deepest sympathy goes out to you. Perhaps you may think that the owls will assist the angels as they fly her to heaven on their glorious wings.

Thank you, everyone. It was the best feeling of the day to see that Wes & Austin were still here. It was not unexpected but so hard on my 93 year old dad. They had been married 62 great years, and her death was peaceful, so there is a lot to be grateful for as well.

I must say, this is the 1st chat room I have ever participated in. Just look at what a wonderful caring group of people are here. Strangers brought together by owls and now praying for a new friend in a time of grief. You guys are the best. Glad to be part of this group.

I once saw an owl close with eyes that would open & close with the time. When it approached the hour it would hoot and the eyes would open wide. Then as the time passed the eyes would slowly close and by the half hour they were half shut, but as time went on they would get closed, and it would snore. Do our babes seem like that at times?
