Random images, screenshots, and manipulations from right here in the SPD chat room. We have over 400 in the current rotation, and a few hundred more still to sff through. Lots of editing left to be done - but it's random, so you shouldn't see the same show twice. (almost 25,000 image views tonight abnet)

Thanks to everyone who has contributed images. Enjoy!
I'm going to make a PDF of tonight's chat then head off to bed. Good night all

Way back yonder in my college days in Boston, I used to stand like that to wait for the subway - looking blankly down the tunnel, willing a headlight to come around the bend. Lighting a cigarette (hey, it was 1978!) always worked. But I would never condone it for Wesley!!

They've left me all alone in this house.
Won't bring me a thing, not even a mouse.
I've screeched and yelled, done bits of fussing.
Tried everything, short of cussing.
I've flew off to find them and stood at the door.
If I don't eat soon I'm going to get poor.
Mom, Dad? Please bring me some food.
I'm just saying, not being rude.
Doesn't have to be something yummy.
Just a little something to fill up my tummy

I play all the time. Come to think of it, I haven't played any games since Moly & Col Arrggg!

 Haven't taken the time to scroll through the basement, and just scanning this "page" I'm not sure who will appreciate this: if this is lame, please don't remember me this way; consider me as a senior citizen trying to fit into this world. That being said: Have all six eggs hatched? What's that noise? Who's McGee? How do I take a screen shot??

Honestly, I love this experience - I've cried and laughed with y'ow! - I've learned, maybe taught; been delighted & saddened with what some of you are going through - maybe I just leave you all in my nightly prayers: God Bless... the Royals and all who "belong" to them.

 Nancy, four of the five hatched, we do not see the parents Molly or McGee anymore except maybe in a quick flyby. Two owlets (teenagers?) have left the nest permanently but do come back and play on the platforms, and the other two leave at night but have always come back in the morning. We think one might not come back in again after tonight. That leaves the youngest, Wesley, still in the box right now, who is making that screeching sound wanting some food.

You can take a screen shot by pressing the Prnt Scrn button on your keyboard then pasting it into a Paint program, if you have Windows.

 We are this rather large owlsh community here! Like you I have enjoyed this experience immensely. Check the site above for when eggs hatched. Owls have grown up and one by one left the house. Two left during the day now. The baby in the house now waiting for dinner possibly. McGhee father owl. Moly mom owl. Names of all above. No idea of how to get a screen shot.

 Nancy,
 Right above the picture is a list of the eggs and what happened to them, When they hatched etc. The noise is the owl in the box making Owl sounds, or hissing as it is called here. Molly is the mother, McGee is the Daddy owl.
 I don't know how to do screen shots. Someone else will have to answer that. There are bts of photos that Carols has taken at <http://mollysbox.wordpress.com/blog/> You can right click your mouse and save them from there if you want to.
 There is a nice Timeline here <http://mlyowlabworks.com/Timeline> sewhobby, well, thanks so much... sorry, your patience with the old people should be rewarded 10 fold. I've been a "semi-regular" since March 25th, never asking a question to which I didn't know the answer. This has just been so entertaining I couldn't leave it without my particular ("particular") form of humor. As noted above, time & time again we prove to be exceptional - the only thing I've really actually missed is the personal, old, slow laptop, but not my employer's.

Hunting/Fishing, by the way, and this may be totally inappropriate: check out where I work: outtech-online.com

I am always smiling and grateful when I wake up after she has visited me in my dreams. Also, she had her own special "funny little ways" a very surprising vocalization. She would go into the bathroom to drink out of a bowl of water and in a very loud voice say something that sorta sounded like, "Owly owly owly owly owly Owlllll it would echo out of the bowl and the bathroom. People in the living room would always remark, "IS THAT YOUR CAT?" She was the ultimate lap cat and also liked to sleep with me, curled right under my chin with the sheet folded under her chin and her little head shared my pillow. I could go on forever but I doubt you've even read this far. LOVING WILLOW

This is what I saw in watching OwlBox 2 (small cam view). I saw to owls/owlet fly up at the same time to land on the perch just below the "porch". I appeared that one of the owls/owlets had food in its mouth and they began sort of fighting over it and one of them went down below the perch and the other one went into the owl box empty with nothing in its mouth. That is probably why Wesley is having a fit. No food was delivered because the owl delivering it was robbed just outside the owl box. This is what I saw. Anyone else watching the small cam view and see that happen with the two fighting while flying/hovering just over that perch that looks like a clothesline pole.

I only saw 2 owls.
I first saw an owl land on the camera perch. I didn't see food in its beak though. Of course it was hard to see on the little camera, but it was looking up toward the sky for a few seconds and I didn't see it holding anything.
Then I was distracted and saw an owl on the perch of the box. I assumed it was the one from the camera perch.
Then I saw one fly up and land on the perch pole near the box. The owl on the perch of the box was still there.
Then I saw the one from the perch pole hop over to the perch on the box. That made 2 owls on the perch by the door.

One flew off, the other sat outside the door for a few seconds before going into the box.
I didn't see if the one that flew off actually had any food in its beak.
I thought maybe at that point the owl that flew off was a parent that had left a treat in the box, and the other owl went in to get it.
But based on the amount of squawking going on, it seems that no treat was left. So the owl that flew off was likely another owlet.

James, Here's one for you. I am in Google Chrome and clicked on the plus symbol at the top after having had the live feed initially on my computer screen. When I clicked on the "+" to get a new tab it brought up a still shot of Austin and Wesley in daylight and for Owl Box 2 it shows a live feed of night time. When I came on computer tonight, I did not have Google Chrome open already. Had to open to begin watching tonight. I assume you have the answer for how this happened because you are so smart!!!! 😊

Sounds like it is displaying one old picture from the temp files. The videos are buffered by your system and all those temp files can build up, causing weird things things to happen occasionally. It should have corrected itself in short time, as soon as the video began streaming again. Did it?

Awww... I missed Austin's cannon shot take off! I remember the first time he did that; scared Mooney and me! I was thinking of a song (music teacher curse) when I read someone's remark "Max be a lady tonight". Now I can't get it out of my head! So here goes:

Max be a lady tonight. Max be a lady tonight.
Max, if you've ever been a lady to begin with; Max be a lady tonight! (Think Frank Sinatra and Luck)

Repost from the basement.
Earlier today, Wes did her baying down to nap gig again.
Austin was so embarrassed as it was, so un-owl like.
So he picked on her.
He tried to pluck her hind feathers.
He stepped on her.
He didn't stop until she was up on one leg again!

Ugh! I dislike being gone that long. Spent forever on the phone with my sister in Texas. Our parents are flying up here to Oregon on Saturday for the summer and stay in their condo here (to visit me, the black sheep and my family) and to get out of the Texas heat. They've been doing that for nine years now. Apparently our father is getting a bit of dementia and she wanted to make sure I would have extra keys and stuff in preparation for him forgetting them.

Anyhoot, glad to be back, and I'm just in time for the show!

Two more -- of birds! -- and I "promise" to stop...

- 1- Nest box we mounted to the kitchen window. The chickadee-lets got "very" crowded just before fledging.
- 2- Red-tailed hawk at an "empty" box -- he/she definitely does not fit.

Did the chickadees see you in the kitchen? If they did see you, what did they do? That must be so cool to watch them grow right from your kitchen window!

Initially, we kept that area of the window covered. Slowly exposed our world to theirs over time. Mom and Dad Chickadee took it all in stride, and I think "the family" got to enjoy watching us as much as we did them-- the box was just above our kitchen sink!

I couldn't resist having the photo proof of her crying made up. I sent a collage of these and others to her at work on her as a Happy Birthday on her 45th birthday. They may be a little grainy as they are scanned copies.

 natalie, they are such a precious thing they do need supervision with smaller children because they are super prickly but they have such personality and they are easy to care for. sanitation-wise they're easier than a cat and they don't stink like hamsters. I loved our hamms too but their urine is stinky! It's just like any pet, you have to be sure you are willing to commit to their lifespan so they don't wind up like lots of critters, homeless and sad.

 The European ones, as in the UK, are not pets; they need to live outdoors. The smaller, African ones, which were imported to the U.S. and are bred for pets, are cute little pets. I was called down to an animal seizure in TX at which over 25,000 (yes, that's over 25,000!) animals were seized from an abusive importer; I helped care for almost 800 hedges and 6 came home with me

 Just as cute and adorable as can be, Jenn, and I can appreciate and applaud your efforts and the sad reasons for having them as they would otherwise have become predator food if the breeder had just let them go. I hope that you or others who participate in wildlife rescue and rehab don't take my comments personally. For many reasons I am opposed to the import and breeding of non-native species to the US. So many people buy them as exotic pets, only to dispose of them when they tire of them (the same type of people who drop domestic pets off beside the road). I have seen what has happened in FL where iguanas, monitor lizards, boas and pythons have proliferated in the wild and are wiping out native animals and literally invading the State.

 One black named Mandi Lab mix that I found along side the road when she was 8 weeks old and Nikki the black and white lab mix we got at the shelter when she was 8 weeks. They are 7 now and the love of our lives. They go with us camping. Old aren't "junk yard dogs"...they are "trailer traveling dogs"! OK, I had to put another one up.....When I am making my quilts, they come and lay beside me.

 All laughing aside, when Wesley had his cat atonic, I moment earlier this evening, I cringed when I thought of that nesting box gunk all over his beautiful body! All talk of owls rescues is not a moment away from the now several inches of accumulated (use your imagination) materials on the nest floor. I can only hope that Carlos will consult bird experts as to how to deal with the nest box once our family vacates the premises. I really think something will have to be done to restore hygiene to that box. Does anyone disagree?

 Homeschool, that's a great question. Maybe the wind and insects naturally cleanse the tree nests. This is an artificially placed structure which is designed to shelter from the elements, so it isn't really subject to nature's ways. I trust Carlos to do the right thing.

 Elliott, from the Barn Owl Trust pages I have read that barn owls never clean out old nests. The often will take a nest that's been vacated by another type of bird and move in, again without cleaning. There's a picture there with nest "fluff" showing all around the edges of the owl box opening as if it's been pushed way up the walls. I don't know but it seems they like the lived in look!

 Yes, Owlsaurus, I can understand that reasoning if the nests are outside, but this owl box is an enclosure and just wondered if it might be treated different... I know zilch myself... I guess we will see if they come back next spring.

Your chat below tadpoles and chat the other night about fireflies brings back so many childhood memories. We used to collect tadpoles and watch them Morph into frogs. Our after-dark playtime in the summer included catching fireflies and putting them in jars with holes poked in the lids (we always had to let them go before going in for the night - except the night I snuck a jar in hoping it would be a night light and my mother found it and made me take it back out). In the summer we also collected one or two monarch butterfly chrysalises (sp?) atached to the milkweed stem and keep them in a terrarium of sorts until they emerged.

Just click it and it will open your computer browser. Just find the pic you want to post and click on it. If you get the twirly wheel, the file is too big and will need to be resized. You can do that where your pics are stored.

Play around with it and see what you find. You may be surprised with yourself!!!

 Here is a Barn owl nest link in the Netherlands. She has six owlets and bits of food in the pantry. There are two camera views and you can click on which one you want to view. It is in Dutch, and my tool bar translates it into English. On the index bar of this link in English it says Screech Owl twice, and it is wrong. The second Screech owl is actually a Barn owl. The Screech Owls are cute too. Hope you enjoy it.

 Thanks, I didn't know that. Man or man the trouble I've had trying to watch foreign web cams! Aside from not knowing the language, I clicked on the wrong "send" and emailed half the people in Europe!! 😊 A lot of them emailed me with warm welcomes, but one was kinda snotty 😊.

 Quite a travebugue you're putting together, Adam. They will make good memories for you. I've been to the Cabrillo National Monument and the Point Loma Lighthouse. A very beautiful spot. It was interesting to me because it is the southwestern most point in the Continental U.S. and, because I live in Maine, I have been to the northeastern most point, too.

 I'm not Owl, but I know what a neti pot is: it's a small ceramic or plastic pitcher that looks kind of like an Aladdin's lamp. You fill it with warm salt water and use it to wash out your nasal passages. You can buy them in any health food store, or online. In fact, google "neti pot" and you'll find lots of sources, and photos, and videos showing you how to use it. It really works!

James, just for information I went out and started the slideshow from the wiki. It hung up on frame 43, but when I clicked on it I could continue it on your website! Cool! I can't wait to finish it. A note about the slideshow. Except for the very first image, it's random, so no two people/viewings will ever see the same sequence. Therefore, frame numbers don't help much. But all the traffic on the page does. I just checked and it is over 15,000 image views already. 😊

Hi everyone. I was watching the news tonight and am soo angry about this "oil problem" and how it is killing the birds...showed a couple of them soaked in oil and dying...broke my heart. Now on a light er note our little owl family is doing great...it was so much fun last night watching them fly around in the background
