Emily, you asked it Barn Owls drink. Most articles say they do not drink but Wesley the owl (not our Wesley) did drink. There was also a video of an owl playing in a lawn sprinkler.

EMILY - if you're still here - this is about that great owl family picture you posted earlier. I need to know the state that pic was taken in. There's a question whether the owls are GHOs or Screech Owls. I think GHO, but I have to prove it. I'm comparing facial characteristics, and there are Western Screeches and Eastern Screeches.

There's usually a wooden "pocket tunnel" built down the center of the loft. We had a big fan blowing through it so the hay would stay dry.

Not
Hay is dry when it's baled.
If not it will start on fire.
Wet hay builds up heat, enough to spontaneously combust

I believe the rafters of a barn is way cooler (grew up on a farm and it was pretty nice up there. Shady - wind blowing through). The owl house is small and they owls fill it up pretty well. So not as much space for air movement. And there doesn't seem to be much of an opening. The roof looks a little open at the eave on the owl house but it doesn't seem too drafty in there in my opinion.

Might get hotter faster, as less space to heat up.
But no warmer than a barn.
Box would cool faster too.

It probably is warmer there, but they don't appear to be in any distress and they will use their instinctive measures of panting and wing spread to keep cool. With only two in there now there is probably more circulation and appears to be adequate ventilation through roof vents and door.

Lynda, there has always been a breeze through the box. I haven't been worried about it and Carlos says they only use 1/2 the box anyway so there seems to be enough space.

Oh, I agree, Barb. There are roof vents all along both sides and the door opening. It can't be any worse than being wedged down into the hollow of a tree with NO air.

Except when in a tree it's in shade due to branch overhead.
If the box is in a barn then it is a double layer. The barn roof provides shade for said box.
No doubt these owls are hot today, hence their actions right now.
Not to mention, go watch Starr Ranch cam, Barn Owls in a tree hollow. Never saw her or owlets doing this action.

you mix the batter and pour it into the pan, then mix sugar with cocoa and cinnamon and pour it on top, then cut it in... so the cake is pale with speckles, with warm brown swirls in it.

Every afternoon for the past few days they've gone through this manic stage. If today is the same, in about 15 minutes Wes will do her classic 'face plant' and just drop for a while. (Everyone will ask if she is OK and make jokes about her falling out of trees! LOL)

Oh, he definitely sees the lens! Probably a little reflection of himself? If he horks now we will have the most perfect view... but it could be ugly!

I was at a wildlife center a long time ago. They had a Great Horned owl (was impaired and couldn't be released) there who used to dap it's beak and make that tapping noise. I don't know why she did that. But it was sort of an interesting thing.

The site at http://animaldiversity.ummz.umich.edu/site/accounts/information/Tyto\_alba.html talks about Barn Owl communication. It says:
"Adults use a variety of vocalizations, including a defensive call, a drawn-out gasping sound that is probably the best known call. The distress call is a series of drawn-out screams. Other vocalizations include a fast, often probed, twitter for feeding, and an explosive yell that is usually directed at a mammalian predator. Also, greeting and conversational twitters seem to convey recognition of mate and accompany various courtship activities."
Maybe some of the people here who worked with Barn Owls know about other sounds.

Hi everyone
Now that everyone seems to be gone, I learned how to make an avatar! Actually I knew how but my computer wouldn't let me so I'm at my daughter-in-law's using her computer...and no problem. Checked this morning and saw Austin come back, happy to see, but figure any day now the box will be empty. I went to check out a pre-school for my grandson and wondered if anyone had any experience with the Goddard School? They seem to be nationwide but I'm not familiar with them. Well, I wish I could deliver a glass of lemonade to the box but guess I'll just have one myself.

 Not a pet. We have a couple of rabbits in our yard that keep having bunnies. We love watching them. Unfortunately we also have a red tailed hawk that flies through for dinner. It used to make me sad until I saw Molly and McGee feeding rabbits to our owlets. The hawk keeps the rodents down and it seems that even few weeks I get to see new bunnies. I just don't want to watch the dinner time exchange.

Jan - I FINALLY snagged a photo of one of these orioles! They sure don't sit still very long. Think they're staying around and feasting on a dying maple tree (bugz?) It's a BIG old shade tree over deck. do NOT know what we'll do without it. ... I'll post photo later ... a host of hummingbirds found the hummingbird bush today ... I'm sitting there patiently too - however, the cat, the dog, the sunbathing daughter ... are scaring the hummers away. ...

When Carlos was on earlier - he said it was a nice day in San Marcos. It does appear to be kind of humid there. And if the box doesn't offer much ventilation, maybe it is getting a bit warm inside - especially being it is a sunny day there. You know how hot a tent gets (no insulation in the roof) when the sun shines on it. Probably the same thing in the owl box. They should stand closer to the door for some air.

Here's the weather forecast there: <http://www.weatherusa.net/forecasts/?pands=san%20marcos,%20ca>

Wesley and Austin fly around with the others at night, but they still return to the box for the day. Max and Patti hang out in a nearby palm tree during the day. But the family is still hunting together.

Looks hot today. Or I am projecting since it is hot here today and my air is down. Although, I think it may be a quick fix. I called an Heating and Air guy described my problem and he said it's probably the filters we are using. HE said they cause 70% of the calls they get! Apparently, my super allergy filters are not so super for a heat pump unit.

Today, 11:31:54 - Flag - Like - Reply

homeschoolinc, Don't forget to have your thermostat checked as well. We were having lots of problems with ours this winter and luckily our son is in the AC/heating business. He fixed it right away. Good luck.

Today, 11:39:58 - Flag - Like - Reply

If the filter is too good, it makes the air handler work too hard to push air through it. And once a high efficiency filter gets plugged up, it'll make the unit work even harder until it croaks. You might want to look for high efficiency filters that have a low pressure drop. that means it's easier to push air through them. And changing them regularly (if it says to change them every 3 months, you should!) will keep your air handler happy.

Hal! Bring your tents and port-o-poties! I only have 600 sq.ft. of interior space and my bathroom is smaller than most closets. But, the meadow out front would make for a nice gathering spot, for sure. And the woods that make up the remainder of the 10 acres would make for a great raptor nest hunt. My neighbor (and landbird) has said that she has been hearing young hawks screeching behind her house. I had barred owls nest ed behind mine. Lots of activity out there, shame I can't see any of quite like I can from right here, inside.

Jan, back to the owl question. For what it's worth, my husband just came in from birding and I showed him Emily's photo. He can't tell for sure about the size, either, but he thinks screech owl is more likely because (he says) that GH owls rarely have three babies. Now I'm going nuts wanting to know the answer!! 😞

Jan (Bayonne, NJ)

Not to fear - I'll find out. But tell hubby that the presence of three babies doesn't really prove it, because a fourth could have died. Not an uncommon occurrence.

According to the book I'm reading, WESLEY THE OWL, they don't drink. They get everything they need by eating mice, rats, etc. Wesley (not OUR WESLEY was an exception because he lived with a human and since Stacey was the "mom" and washed her face, Wesley learned to love water. Not normal owl behavior. kathleen Hello, just checking in for a few minutes and saw the video of Kramer again. A couple years ago I saw this huge picture of Kramer in a yard sale and bought it for my dad because he just loves quoting him. Would you believe he hung it up in the kitchen, right by the table and it has been there ever since! (I don't think my mom's very pleased) Here is an image of what the picture looks like....and about the first thing I see when I go and visit mom and dad 😊.

Kathleen...I see you have Sunny, my avatar today, up in the corner to fit in. You don't have to! I am very happy that Merlin is included, because of what we went through. And I think everyone will remember me by that avatar of him! You are so sweet to do this! Of course, if you have room for Sunny that is great! But I have used 4 avatars, and do not expect them to be there on the collage! Take care Dear!

Playing with my tool on looking at the picture, ie:intensity, saturation, exposure, contrast and sharpness. Those are two owls flying over head. I would say their heads are headed towards the left-> The blur is movement on the wing feathers, which shows up in the many night photos as very transparent, here is rendering the tools on the photo, see what you think:

Yes, that is indeed a UFO! Unidentified Flying Owl. 😊

The reason for the disturbing angular appearance of the wings is due to the frame rate of the video being captured. Think of the picture being drawn across your screen line by line. The screenshot you caught was sort of halfway between two different frames in the video, sort of. That's a very basic and partially untrue description, but it's close enough for MODs.

I caught many, many frames of the little hummingbird with its wings flapping that turned out very similar. Much more pronounced, actually.

I mentioned earlier that I had seen some tiny faces peeking out of a hole in large maple tree in our front yard. There is a nest of flying squirrels in there. <http://www.ensature.com/files/Higgins/detail.asp?shapeID=1041&curGroupID=5&fromWhere=&curPageNum=8> Can't get a photo of them, but just got a poor shot of hole in the tree before the camera battery died. Such a beautiful day here, I had to take another walk around our 3 acre property that is surrounded on 3 sides by acres and acres of forest. There is bird song and the rat-a-tat of downy and hairy woodpeckers everywhere and probably several hidden nests nearby. Also saw a pair of broadwinged hawks circling overhead. They frequently nest on the hill beyond the road that runs along a river across from us.

I don't think so. Momma squirrel wouldn't be too happy with that and they can give a nasty bite - I know from experience. The cat we used to have caught a few from time to time and brought them into the bedroom in the middle of the night for a "show and tell" session. They were sometimes alive and I had to round them and put them outside.

Oh, she just opened her wings protectively and gathered all the little ones under her! Of course, Molly comes instantly to mind, how tender she was with her babies. Barn Owls are great mothers! Thanks for the tip, Cheryl. I'm going to check on this family often!

I love my Yankee candles, too, Becky. Can't burn them very often any more because of hubby's breathing problems. Also, I seem to be allergic to more things like strong scents, pollen, etc. than ever. I bought one candle made by this company in Texas while in FL this past winter <http://www.lydercan.com>. It is a "Winter Wonderland" scent that is as close to a real balsam fir scent than any I've ever had, but had to buy candles without knowing what they smell like first. Hmm... maybe I'll do a little shopping at the Yankee Candle site this afternoon.

He told us there is expected high of 72 deg today and he'll be posting pictures of the dogs next door and some other pictures from around the place.

This morning he told us that the neighbors come out to watch the owls and occasionally shine a flashlight on the box to see the owls. The box is closer to their back door than it is to Carlos'.

Owls must have a very interesting digestive system. They eat the whole "treat" and pelletize and regurgitate the undigestible parts, bones, fur, feathers.

And then they pick apart the pellets for small bones that they eat for calcium! Nesting barn owl mothers pick the pellets apart to make a nest of fur for her eggs and babies. Nature is so efficient!

Click on the "Live Wildlife Webcams". You will then see a listing of the many webcams that others are referring to. I believe the Tawny Owl nest is the first one listed. Hope that helps. 😊

I've never advertised. ... I lost my job about 2.5 years ago after 23 years in an office, 21 years at the City Hall. up a nice juicy wormer something! We had some fledge at work a couple of weeks ago - sadly one didn't make it as I found him in a corner the following week but I think the other one is OK. When I ran a garden centre we had a baby robin 'adopt' us and he used to come and sit on the counter when we were serving customers - people used to think he was a model!!

People came in just to see the owls. Many people took pictures. And they have blown up the pictures and placed them all over the store. The family did leave together not long ago! So heartwarming to know the kindness of others!! And another example...that nature often will choose and crazy place to nest...but that they can and do make it!! 😊 The End!!

I've been meaning to tell you all about a owl story that made the news in Colorado. A pair of owls...nested in huge...a huge pile of mulch at a Lowe's garden area here. The manager called wildlife people and never got a response. So he just left them there and would not allow anyone to disturb them. They raise 3 babies there!! When they were fledging...they would land on the floor in the store...so they would block off areas!!!

Its funny how you pick things up isn't it - I was at work a couple of weeks ago and heard some noise at the top of a tall conifer - again it wasn't 'Barn Owl' like but it was definitely the sound of baby raptors of some sort - and sure enough a Kestrel emerged from the tree - I probably wouldn't have taken any notice if I hadn't been on here and 'recognised' the sound. I watched her fly in and out feeding the chicks every time I was there - but never did manage to get a decent photo of her!

What wonderful sights for you Jaci - and Cheryl!! I think this experience has made us all more "in tune" with the sounds and sights of the nature around us. Well after Molly, McGee and family have flown away, those sights and sounds will stay with us.

they started out with 4 owlettees. 2 died early on, I thought was that the adult owls were only feeding the two older owlettees. Food is scarce there apparently, everyone has a guess as to why this happened. The two older chicks looked healthy enough...but one more died. Leaving this last one. Mom and dad are not there often...so everyone warts over this last one left.

Emily it is on the SPO, slight...don't know how to transfer sights for you to click on. This nest is in Europe.

Has anyone ever seen a fledgling bird follow its mother and beg to be fed? One time I was walking and witness a bird following another bigger bird and just giving it heck...ever seeing up, chirping like crazy as if it was demanding something and the other bird kept ignoring it and hopping along on the bushes and the ground. It was quite comical to watch and I wasn't sure what I was watching until I discussed it with my mom and she told me that was a fledgling bird begging its mom for food. Kinda reminds me of these two sitting outside of the house begging their parents to show up for a treat.

Ms B...do you see a little box up on the left above where your name is? Click on it, then browse your computer for the picture you want. Open the picture and it will show up in the box and become your avatar. ( I'm sure someone else can give better instructions than me, though.)

Hi Ruth from MN - Great to see someone else from MN here. Yes, the Black Bear seems to be everywhere, doesn't it. I'm glad, though, but I hope it doesn't get to be perceived as a nuisance and start getting hurt by its only predator, humans. I know there is a hunting season for them. They aren't mean and don't hurt humans unless they feel threatened, I think.

This is fun. There were 2 mockingbirds on the owl nest box.
Since a mockingbird will eat almost everything, maybe they want to graze the floor.

We had quite a bit of tree damage from couple of wet, heavy snow storms this winter - big and small branches on a lot of trees broken, etc. One of the big maples lost a couple of large branches. Just below where it broke (about 20 ft. up) is a hollow that has been used a various times by woodpeckers and the flying squirrels. This morning I noticed some tiny "faces" peeking out and binoculars confirmed that there is a family of flying squirrels there again. I can't get a meaningful picture, so have included a link for picture and description. The are a nocturnal mammal, so we never see them out and about during the day. We had a mother bear and her cub in the Minneapolis suburb of Edna yesterday. There was video of them going through the streets, crossing the streets, etc. Mom was moving at quite a fast pace and her cub had a hard time keeping up but it did! I heard they left the suburb and headed out to safer grounds without incident. So glad!

Hi Ruth - Great to see someone else from MN here. Yes, the Back Bear seems to be everywhere, doesn't it. I'm glad, though, but I hope it doesn't get to be perceived as a nuisance and start getting hurt by its only predator, humans. I know there is a hunting season for them. They aren't mean and don't hurt humans unless they feel threatened, I think.

We've had them appearing in backyards and shopping malls in the Raleigh/Durham, NC area for a few years now. Scattered reporting. Several years ago we had some overzealous officers put one down in someone's safely fenced-in backyard, just as the wildlife personnel from the state were arriving to assess the situation. Somewhat sad, really. Many folks are frightened because they are so unfamiliar with wildlife.

Good morning James,
You got a frantic "help" from the middle of the night. Please ignore what I asked. AZGuest told me how to use the snipping tool and now I will burn up hard drive with yet more pictures.

BTW I like your new name. Be sure to run from Midarite merchant men and Ishmeettes (heh, heh, heh)

It also depends largely on the amount of light reaching inside the box. The inside is actually pretty dark, even during the day, the camera needs enough light to show a decent image.

Welcome! Carlos changes from inside to outside cam based on whether there is enough natural light to see anything inside. It's been my experience that there's generally 12 hours in, 12 hours out, switching about 9:30, although I haven't been on here as regularly as in the past the last week or so, with in getting dark later this timing may be off. Oh, and there were 2 whole days when Carlos went to visit family, we had the outdoor cam the whole time. Carlos has spent a whole lot of time keeping many people happy, God bless him. I've learned to be thankful for any moment we get, inside or out.

That makes me think of all the similarities between most ads and goose droppings...

Unfortunately, both are essential in the real world: neither are pleasant; some are unsightly;

...and no one wants to wade through them on their morning stroll. 😊

Any more?

Good morning, everyone! Glad to see that Wesley & Austin are back in the box!! I wonder what antics Wesley is going to pull today? He had me laughing so hard yesterday, I almost fell out of my chair! I always thought he was a drama queen, but as the pressure builds on him to get out there and behave like an adult, his snits, hissy fits, stomping and screeching are truly comical!

You go up to the far left of Owl Box 2 (ob2) and there is a gray silhouette. Click on the silhouette. You will be offered a choice of where to get the picture for your avatar. I picked one I already had on the computer. Then you click that choice and you have an avatar.

No. 3 first, just left click on the picture and then be patient. It should open in another window
No.2 when I click Like, it just comes up with my avatar and says "You" underneath.
No.1 Left click on your grey avatar, then choose where you want to get your avatar from. If you've a picture on your computer you want to use, click where it says computer. I think it then comes up as Browse, click this and navigate to where your pictures are stored - My Pictures or My Photos perhaps and select the picture you want to use.

Someone else may be able to explain this a bit better.

Good morning, everyone.
For those of you looking for something to reminisce over... something to keep you occupied until the camera view switches over to inside... We have a new Photo Slideshow on the Moly Wiki - Moly \(the Owl\)'s Wiki / Photos Photos Photos Random images, screenshots, and manipulations gathered from folks here in the SPO chat room. We have over 400 images in the current slideshow, with a few hundred more still to sift through. The slideshow is generated randomly, on every visit, so you shouldn't see the same show twice.
I'll be in the basement, having my first cup of coffee and cooking up a fresh PDF of last night's chat. (Anyone in Carbs' chat? send him/them a link) 😊
