Live Barn Owl Nest Box Cam - San Marcos, CA

This is a live feed of a wild female barn owl named Molly. The owl box is located 15 feet off the ground. The male (McGee) has a white chest and face. He usually shows up after dark but has spent an entire day with the female. For more Information about the owls and this cam. Click Here Click Here to "Like" us on Facebook.

Morning Everyone. Some photos from relatively early last night. The first one is Austin launching from the box. The last one was taken at 20:08 PDT. I have a ton to look through from later, with 4 or more owls in frame, but that will wait till later after coffee and a PDF. I'm heading to the basement.

I don't think that's too likely, but I do think they'll continue to show up around the box and the playground at night for quite some time. They have a relatively small territory, and at least one of two of them are likely to stay pretty close to home during their life span.

It's interesting that the siblings are still congregating at the owl box at night. I wonder if that will continue to be their meeting place into the future? If so, it would seem to seem to defy the theory that they are going out and establishing their own hunting territories.

Good morning from Wisconsin. We spent the last couple days up in the northwoods without a computer. Last night, trying to catch up on these kids, I found the words for Moly's song. One speculation was that food was not very abundant for the other owls, but it's always been readily available for Moly & McGee's crew. There's no reason for these owls to leave the area in search of more food when they can get big rats and gophers right here.

Well, that makes sense in a way didn't I think of that kind of way. I guess I was wondering because all the books I read said that barn owls stay with the parents for about 80 days to learn to hunt before they take off on their own.

Seems that these two have a special bond. May be because they were always fed together when Moly would hold Max and Patti off. I'm glad they are both back but in reality, we are only days away from them both heading out and not returning. 😊 Mom and Dad won't continue to feed them in the box. That's just the way of the wild.

What if it wasn't Austin that went in, maybe they decided to take turns babysitting Wes. I can't tell one from the other, especially on these black and white views.

It looks like maybe Austin and Wes are pairing up. It'll be interesting to see if he sticks with her till she's ready to leave and then they go together.

Can someone tell me about owl intermarriage? Does it happen often, and actually, why not? They are all so close and such social creatures.

Today, 05:24:24 - Flag - Like - Reply

Instinct will tell them to fly off to separate hunting area and find a mate. They would only pair up if no other mates are available and then the eggs would not likely be viable.

So that means that Moly and McGee are not related. This is interesting. Nature prevents abnormalities if the parents are closely related. Pretty neat, eh?

I don't think they are deciding to do any of this or drawing straws to see who sits with Wesley. But I do think the two youngest are drawn together and find comfort together. The others may even want them out of the box and into the trees, simply because that's how these owls have taken comfort during the day - huddled all together. So Austin is torn between the comfort of the box and his youngest sibling on one side - and the urge to move on to the next stage of his life with his older sibs on the other side. West cries may just pull him over the edge to her side for now. It's so fascinating!!!

Social? ves and no. They do typically mate for life according to the most common stats and we've seen how dedicated they are to successfully raising their young. But they don't form groups and I can't find anything that says the kids would stick around their nest box for very long. They are supposed to fly off and find their own territory. It's what owls do and these should do it too. Unfortunately I don't think Wes has been reading the same documents I've been reading! LOL

I've also read that sibling have been known to mate but the clutch usually isn't successful (eggs don't hatch). If a mated pair has a bad clutch, they split up and look for different mates. Remember, I am NOT an owl expert: I'm just passing along information I've picked up over the past 3 months!

You may not be an expert, but what you say makes sense and you know a bit more than I do. Raptors have fascinated me for many yrs. and the owl in particular is such a wonderful bird. I held a snowy owl in Ireland, it weighed almost nothing but was so big and beautiful. Then I hunted with a Harris Hawk and that turned the tide for me...I love them all, big and small, but raptors have a very special spot.

Ooooo, the peregrine!

Morning from Cincinnati...I am guessin Austin is guarding the door, while Wesley Anne eats. Pattison has tried to steal food from the babies several times this past week, and Austin has done his best to tell Pattison NO. He does a fine job of lightly pecking and nudging the warma be theif.

Maybe Wes has an eating disorder because she was the youngest and watched her siblings get more food when she was tiny. Now that she's bigger (Apologies, Wesley dear, but you are HUGE! LOL) all she wants to do is eat and be fed. I believe Wes is "built for comfort, not for speed" as they say.

Nancy, I am usually on one of the highways when I see them. Bad place to stop and take pictures. Some of the farther away ones I have seen could be hawks but I'm reasonably sure when there's a crowd of 4 or so circling around they are buzzards.

Sorry for the delay, you may be gone, in which case "Good night." I'm blessed to be able to drive 30 minutes or more, to & fro work. They are only outnumbered by geese & crow on the road I travel - I have a new mission...

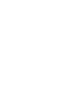

Nancy in Stow, Ohio
After the last couple days, I'm determined to have my camera more ready, but buzzards are next in line to geese from my travels. It's stunning that they are above knee level when on the ground; and what a great service they provide...

I'm sorry to question/have a different view - seems to be the shot is of a parent owl or an "owlet" flying. If it were a spider wouldn't it be in the box?
From what would it be hanging? Any others want to weigh in?
Today, 00:31:53 - Flag - Like - Reply

There is a strand of web across the corner. No spider to be seen.
The white thing is a moth that happened to be flying by when I took the shot. You can see the antennae.

For it to be that bright it has to be close to the camera. The owls have a wider wingspan even when they fly behind the box.

In our cities and in the country where the orchards, and vineyards are, there are a lot of moths that fly around the nite lights on barns, storage sheds and the like and you can see the bats having a feast. They are really fast and manueverable.

I just saw that today is the 6th of June, D-Day-The Longest Day. I tell you Lang (Lieut and aid to German General Rommel) that our only chance is to catch them (allied troops) as they are struggling to get ashore. For both the allies and for Germany that will truly be the longest day. Rommel talking to his aid while overlooking French beaches.

This whole evening has been absolutely outstanding. And it's been wonderful sharing it with all of you. I'm just so full of warmth in this whole experience... (I guess I'm getting sentimental) Hope that's OK.
