Wow, it looks like Wesley up front. He looks bigger than even yesterday. Almost to large for the box. I imagine that tonight will be the last night for either of them in the box. I guess we should get a lottery going. I think she comes back because Austin comes back. They will probably decide together not to come back in.

OH my - thinking HOW alone Wes will feel once Austin chooses not to go in the box. ... Wes will surely follow suit thereafter ... but such aloneness! 🙁 Wes = definitely a type youngest child ... crazy it happens in the aviary kingdom also.

if wes continues to follow the pattern, she'll cry for an hour until someone comes to stay with her! my goodness she's spoiled! haha she oried for a solid hour the other night....on the perch, then in the box and someone finally brought her a treat. then everyone came by and i don't think she ate until much later!

I don't know if anyone else noticed, but while Austin was trying to make up his mind what to do, there was a flutter of white wings down by the platform. Did anyone else see it? Good morning MODs so glad to see we have another bonus day. Very fun and interesting day yesterday. It was great seeing Carlos and the creative group and getting to order the hard cover book (which I did). And then James creating another chat site for us on Facebook (joined that too). Many of us are starting to get that stressed out feeling like what are we going to do when the babies are off and on their own. So good that SPO is going to keep this site open for us and now we will have Facebook too. Have a great day everyone. ٢

Oh Yeah, who's that in the box, Mooly or Marie? Where are the BABIES? Did a dingo eat them????? 😫 😫

ALso, I woke up to almost 100 emails from some weird chick who calls herself FaceLooker, or something like that. Every one of her weird bve notes had a link to this place - SPO-MOD Support Group & Coffee House (on FB) Is she some kind of sick staker, or what??!!!! 😮 😀

What a weird way to ask someone out for coffee. Hmmmm. Ok, well, I'm off to have a frap-o-chino and a PDF. See you all in a bit!

Have a busy day, so will check back from time to time.

In the in-or-out debate: I think instinct is the driving factor - and I amnot even a little worried about Wesley. These owls are remarkably strong and healthy, they are still being brought food, Austin's instinct to fully fledge is obvious, and Wesley's will be soon, as well. We are blessed with a bit more time... Life is truly wonderful, isn't it? While another day in the box is great for us.. I am feeling concern for both of these Owls. Austin is so bonded to Wesley he won't leave her .. and they both need to start learning survival skills out of the box. So, for me, the desire to see them in the box is becoming less important than them making it in the real world

Owlosaurus Instinct is very strong in animals. Just think about all the survival tactics they show, even without the kind of instructions from a parent that humans would need to learn a new tasks. Instinct is telling this owl that he needs to leave the box and get into the trees. The bonds of the nest - and the feeding by the parents - will keep them together a while longer, but then they'll all fly off alone. Nature doesn't keep them together because the mating wouldn't be successful. And that needs to be successful in order to ensure the continuation of the species. Owls don't hang out in colonies; they are solitary until they mate. JMHO, but I think he's feeling the natural urge to move out to the trees. It's only his nest-bond with his youngest sibling that's keeping him there these last 2 days instinct is strong in all creatures!! think of the worm or caterpillar, for instance. it has never observed its parents or been taught by them ever, yet can devour leaves and spin a cocoon. I'm always amazed at things like this. Today, 06:17:42 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by 🔎 lori 🌇 Jan (Bayonne, NJ)

Jan (Bayonne, NJ) The lower on the scale of brain capadity and complexity, the more pure instinct plays a role in survival, as with the wormand the caterpillar. When you get to the brains of raptors, there's an amazing complexity to them. That's where instinct and intelligence go hand in hand - intelligence indicating the capacity to learn. That's why Wesley will be forced to make a choice. Today, 06:25:59 - Flag - Like - Reply

And I suspect that his nest-bond it self has more to do with the fact that it represents the safe and the known, rather than a bond with his sibling.

Wesley Anne and Austin both in by 5:24. Austin was half out though shortly there after, but never left.

and I lost the shot. I had assumed all were staying out except for Wesley. I wish I had awakened a little bit earlier so see what all of you got to see. I just figured it was Wesley being left alone in the box the first time. The blue box stats show both in the box and many here seem to be confirming that. RECIPE FOR PRESERVING OWLETS - By Storymom 5-26-2010 Take 1 large field, 4 adorable baby owls, several trees, a cool brook, a large quantity of field mice and a pinch of pebbles. Mix the owlets and trees together and stir frequently. Pour the brook over the pebbles. Sprinkle the field with flowers, various grasses and the field mice. Fill the trees with a gentle summer breeze. Spread over a deep blue sky and bake in the summer sun.

When done, set away safely in a cozy owl box or tree stump. Wrap securely in awe and store in the hearts of everyone.

I understand why so many would like to see themkeep coming back to this nest box. I will miss them, and this chat, terribly. But I can't help but think that Wes is showing poor survival skills. We've read that the majority of barn ow's don't survive their first year - so far, Maxie, Patti and even Austin are demonstrating better hunting and flying skills. Wes won't improve if she just sits there waiting to get fed. I will miss them but I want them to survive & thrive - and to do that they need to leave this box, fly with the big birds and become righteous hunters. Austin seems to understand that (projecting human characteristics onto owls, here!) but Wes seems clueless, even given her 7 day lag. 'Clueless' and 'thrive' don't go together, do they?

I'm very sad to say that I agree, Owlo. Her comical food comas concern me, too. Flopping down in a tree could have some disastrous results. I agree - however I think once Austin moves out she might show a bit more interest - and also I reckon Molly and McGee are perhaps concentrating on getting the two older ones hunting completely for themselves before starting with the other two. I should think in the next couple of days or so they might start showing her some 'tough love' - at least I hope so for her sake.

Good points, and I have considered them. I think I even taked about the '2 now then 2 later' hunting lessons a few days ago. (LOL - I can't remember any more what IVe merely thought and what IVe actually written because so much of it happens late at night when I'm half asleep!) I hope that's what happens. My concern comes not so much from the timing as from Wesley's apparent lack of interest in anything outside the box. Max was flying around, hunting, and staying out of the box for much longer periods of time during the week before she moved to The Palms Resort and Spa. Wes just waits for food and keeps begging for it. Maybe it's just 'baby of the family' syndrome. Hopefully, Molly and McGee will work more at coaxing her out once Max and Patti are self-sufficient.

I agree. The critical point will come when Austin does not return to the box. Then Wesley will be forced to make a choice - and make no mistake, it IS a choice. Owls are very intelligent, which gives them a (limited) ability to choose. Along with that ability come the consequences of making the wrong choice. It's gonna be a cliffhanger with Wesley, I think Today, 06:10:50 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by 👤 cj in fl 🚺 Cheryl Owen Homeschool - I think that as a general rule, it's true of most species, because inbreeding endangers the survival of the species. That said as a 'generalization', there may be some variations in behavior out there, but the rule still stands: the survival of the species as a whole is more important than the survival of any one individual. I've watched Pale Male & Lola for 9 years now, and I believe that they are an exception to the rule. They live in an entirely different environment than most wild Red-tails. But it really is an amazing thing to watch how their bond deepens, even with the sad record of the last 6 years! I 'visit' with them every single day!

Nancy, the site you are on here - Sportsmans Paradise on Line - provides links to many live wildlife webcams. Click on that link at the top of the page to see the whole list. But the pictures from the webcams generally come from another site. Carlos made arrangements with a company called u stre am (one word but I can't type it here or the post will trigger the spam software!) to show his webcam and run a chat room for him. By clicking on the picture, you will go to that site and that chat. That's the 'official' one and the one Carlos and Donna participate in. Many of us prefer this site because the pace is slower, people are so nice and we have the opportunity to really chat instead of just throwing comments around! LOL Plus, we get to post pictures here! If anyone has ever asked me a question that I did not answer, I APOLOGIZE. I found a quirk of this blog is that the SPAM catcher does not post messages with suspicious URLs. I do not know how many times I looked up interesting facts from the Internet about Barn Owls and thought I had posted the information ... WRONG! The SPAM catcher left the post on my page; it just never made it to yours. Bummer!

Here's a question for the owl experts out there; do siblings mate with one another when they've reached the mating stage?

Today, 00: 15:33 - Flag - Like - Reply

Mary Carroll 2

I amnot an owl expert by any means. From what I have read, siblings almost never mate. I cannot cite any owl studies to prove this.

There are several people who contribute to this site who have worked with Barn Owls. Maybe someone will give you a better answer. Today, 00:25:49 - Flag - Like - Reply Liked by Cheryl Owen

Someone did ask that yest erday - only caught some of the replies but I think the general feeling was that its not impossible - although fairly uncommon and if they do then the eggs are likely to be unviable. Happy to be corrected if thats wrong - I'm not an expert by any stretch of the imagination!! Today, 00:26:28 - Flag - Like - Reply

Thank you both....I guess I'mjust hoping that another nearby clutch consists mostly of males, so everybody finds their mate! But then I read early on in this owlbox adventure that 20% of owlets don't make it past the first year...but I don't like to think about that. Today 00.29.20 Like –

Mary Carroll It is higher than that from what I have read. I heard 1 in 15 makes it to year 2. Do the math. How many birds have to die in the first year for one bird to live to - say 10 years and still have an "average" age of 2 years for the whole population? Today, 00:39:56 - Flag - Like - Reply chickadee sigh It's so sad. There must be a better way. I have a hard time believing they take out enough livestock to justify extermination over compensation to ranchers If I remember correctly, the biggest problem was that the reintroduced wolves did too well, bred heartily and healthily, and spread out to territory out of park bounds. I also remember reading or hearing they were pushing out or killing competing predators, and now park officials are worried about the fate of the mountain lion.
