Owosaurus just came back on and saw your post about buying a cup with the owls on it. What a great idea and since it is for our own personal use and not making a profit on it I think that would be fine with Carlos' His photos are just too good and I do love the one you chose too of the two in the palm tree. Yikes, more things for me to spend $$ on. So glad I saw your post.

Have to leave in a few minutes. See that there was LOT of problems this afternoon with the feed, posts, etc. Glad I missed it. Hope all is straightened out now. I know that the following question has nothing to do with the problems experienced this afternoon, but was just wondering - Do all of the embedded videos, music, etc. in the chat have any more effect on the continuing IE shutdowns, refresh, reboot, etc. problems that many of us experience. Maybe just my imagination, but my chat room problems seem to be worse since so many have been embedded vs. just posting links. ?????

I don't know about a single picture or video - all we are embedding usually are links, not the actual file - but I do know that when someone posts a few pictures at once my system freezes up for several moments.

I guess I wasn't very clear, Owib. I know that posting lots of photos and screen shots slow things down. And posting of URL links don't seem to bother. What I was thinking of was embedding the actual video as a part of the chat. I was wondering if those caused things to mess up in the chat. I'm certainly no expert (far from it) and I have no idea how these things work.

Speaking from long personal experience here - I believe it is the U s t r e a m site which causes the locked screens and slow PCs. I've heard Carlos complain about it, I've experienced it on all browsers, IE, and only IF I have anything from the UST site that open on screen. When I have Flash blocked completely, then only allow through the video feeds without allowing through the Blue box info, I can leave a browser open for 12 hours and it will continue to play the video and the chat here works just fine. But, if I allow the Blue box info, AKA the hidden Flash Chat from the UST site, then my screen wants to lock up every couple hours. Maybe related, maybe coincidence, but that's what I've noticed. The photos and videos embedded here have very little to nothing to do with it.

I agree, James, except the part about IE. I do not have any of the PC hangs when scrolling or navigating to the "basement" with Firefox, where as I did constantly with IE.

I placed an order today at cafepress(dot)com for a mug with that great palm tree picture on it ($15 + $5.25 s/h). I should feel guilty I suppose for not ordering the regular Molly mug but I really don't. Please note: I have just purchased one mug for my personal use and will not be selling Carlos's image or profiting from it in any way. I'm using the picture strictly as he said we could.

I just got this message from Eric Blehm about the Molly book - I am so excited that it is actually going to be printed, hard cover. (I already made my pre-order!)

Heib, and thank you for your patience.
You can now pre-order your hardcover of Molly the Owl children's book at the Web site: www.mollyhowbooks.com
Due to the volume of emails (thank you very much!), we have created a list of frequently asked questions and answers. You can view them on the site, and everything should be self-explanatory from there. You can order on PayPal using either your PayPal account or most major credit cards.
Please remember that all orders are PRE-payments for the book, which will be printed and delivered in October 2010, in time for the holidays.

To Anyone--I have emailed Eric Blehm twice about the hardcover of Molly's book and have had no response. Am I emailing to the wrong person? Was sure Carlos said to let Eric know how many copies we might order. I saw someone post that the book would be ready in Oct? Certainly do not want to miss out on that! Thanks so much for any information.

OKAY James Snowman, you have me THINKING ABOUT joining FB.

I have been "invited" by a good friend to be his friend. I KNOW FOR A FACT HE DID NOT INVITE ME. That can only mean one thing, FB has practiced fraud in my mind. And how did they get my name? My husband once signed up using my name (thanks, Hubby) but I very meticulously unsubscribed. I like the concept; I am just not very trusting of this company. Comments? Kathleen

Your message went unanswered because people couldn't see it. The chat server was down, apparently.

On the FB thing - it's a personal choice. Some don't like it and some do. But remember, anyone who has your email address is capable of unknowingly sending that info to FB, in turn having FB send you an email asking you to join. I see it everyday. Many of the people who send FB the email address of all their friends/coworkers never even know they did so. So there is unlikely to be any conspiracy there, just people not paying attention to what they are clicking. Most of the internet population never reads what they click, they just do whatever they think is going to get them somewhere the fastest/easiest. And at times, that has unintended consequences.

I'm off for the rest of the afternoon. Be back tonight.

Hi Kathleen, I got something similar but what I received was not britt in southern cal but something like r recommended friends). One of them was a good friend of mine as well as several neighbors so I'm not sure how they know or work it out but that's what I received. I don't recall an actual invite though. I'm also not sure and can't remember if I signed up and it had me going through my email addresses for "friends" (like your yahoo or something like that) and that may be how they get the info also. Just useless thoughts from me rambling on an empty stomach (necessary excuses I have lined up in case this makes no sense). ☺️

I know there has been a lot of media about security and FaceBook. Then FB posted articles about how to increase your security. I haven't had any problems, but I can't promise you wouldn't. If you are still nervous about it, I'd say "follow your gut instinct" and don't sign up. I signed up because we're overseas and our kids/grands are in the USA. With FB we can keep in daily touch with them and our friends who are at other overseas posts.

Have been offered a blue pill by some weirdo but being female and nearly an octogenarian don't think it will do me much good. It seems to me that everything you post can be seen by everyone who is so-called friends with you. Will have to try to find James post about security unless he sees this and would re-post. Don't want to loose touch with the folks on here but at the moment am not going to chance using F Book

The cameras are fine, I am watching them. It's the broadcast servers that have fouled up.
If you have video still, DO NOT refresh and you should stay good.

I was away from my desk during the "hork" discussion. But "hork" does not seem to be a word used very often in the scientific discussions of owl pellets. "Regurgitate" and "eject" seem to be the most frequently-used terms for how an owl rids itself of the pellets. How did the term "hork a pellet" come to be used in this chatroom, does anyone know?

The term was first mentioned in the other chat room. It is based on this definition - <http://dictionary.reference.com/browse/hork?srsc=2446>

Not F&W material, but pretty common in everyday use by the younger generation. I don't remember exactly who first posted the word here, but I'll search the PDF files and see if I can narrow it down.

why do you suppose austin is often chosen to stand nearer to the camera. wesley's more a rear-left kind of girl. temperature differences? male instinct to protect females? except it thought that females were supposed to be larger and stronger in this species, so i bet wesley would do best defending the box. ...

Austin seems more and more to be hearing "the call of the wild." His curiosity is growing by leaps and bounds. Very soon, Wesley or no, he's going to heed that call.

Natalie, I can see that you and I have a lot to learn to find our way thru the FB thing 😊. I was hoping to have some one to "hold hands" with getting through it. But, we'll get there 😊 thanks to our "mentor" JH and other friends here. Thanks JH for posting the photo about the settings a little while ago. A quick story. I had an email and a message on my FB page last night from a woman I'd never heard of asking if I might be "Brian's wife" and said she remembered when he rescued her pony and brought it home to her when they were 10-12 years old. He did remember her and the event and that was nearly 60 years ago!!! Small world 😊

I shunned Facebook for several years, insisting that I had not lost anything on the internet and didn't need to have everyone boking over my shoulders the whole time. Boy was I wrong. I have seen so many stories similar to your experience, and I have gotten back in touch with folks that I haven't seen/talked to in years. Not to mention all the new folks I've met, many with similar and complimentary interest. It's been a blast. Just stay away from all the games and pass-around gimmicks. They serve no good purpose and they are about the only way for anyone to get away with anything malicious on FB. They become so popular, so fast, that people with ill intent often abuse peoples trust with them. But - The rest of it is golden, I think.

I have been "invited" by a good friend to be his friend. I KNOW FOR A FACT HE DID NOT INVITE ME. That can only mean one thing, FB has practiced fraud in my mind. And how did they get my name? My husband once signed up using my name (thanks, Hubby) but I very meticulously unsubscribed. I like the concept; I am just not very trusting of this company. Comments? Kathleen

Hi Trystan! I meant to ask you something the other day but never got round to it! Someone posted a few days ago which said that Barn Owls have a very good sense of smell. I and a few others thought that might be wrong - certainly some of the literature I've read reckons that they don't have - in fact I read the book you recommended ages ago 'Understanding Owls' by Jemima Parry-Jones and in there she mentions that owls generally don't have a good sense of smell. That information wasn't specific to Barn Owls by the way. Any idea what the answer is????

In fact, having just looked it up, she actually states that owls have NO sense of smell.

Hiya! Heh, whoever said that owls have a good sense of smell needs to clean out Moly's nestbox when the kids leave home! As I found out all too well today. Barn Owl nestboxes in particular have a very strong musty kind of smell. No way they could live in there with a good sense of smell LOL. To be serious who would an owl need a good sense of smell? They already have fantastic eyesight and hearing, and there she mentions that they go to track that mouse down by it's scent, or the fact they can hear the mouses heart beating from twenty (human) paces away?

Good afternoon folks. Checked in only briefly this a.m. to see if the two "kids" were still there. Finally got back a little while ago and got back thru 2 hours of chat before IE closed me down. Some good discussion this morning, especially about the "humanization" of the behavior of the owlets. I think it is natural that we do that because those are the emotions we feel and we translate that to the owl behavior and I think it's OK that we do that from time to time. We have all bonded with this family of owls. Have lots more to do today and will be back later.

Last night, I found a quirk of this blog is that the SPAM catcher does not post messages with suspicious URLs. (I now remember that James said something about this, earlier)
I do not know how many times I have looked up interesting facts from the Internet about Barn Owls and thought I had posted the information for everyone... WRONG!
The SPAM catcher left the post on my page, so I thought it was posted; it just never made it to yours.

I've heard my hubby say something like "It just 'horked its cookies" referring to a piece of equipment that has broken down and have also heard the expression use exactly like Melissa's second definition - "To throw" - Yuck... and it's time for lunch already 😊

Good Morning! I always hold my breathe as I click on 'Owl Nest'. But to see two Owlets there brings such joy... joy that I know won't last forever. How long has it been since Max & Patti left the nest? I cannot remember.
Found another article on the net re: Molly's Owlets that I missed. Wishing you all a great day and week!

Awww they are my/our two mighty fine looking babies in the box this morning... but probably not for to much longer... my hubby says when Austin goes/stays away for the day that Wesley will probably not stay but one more day by herself... we'll see! I believe they will still visit the box and the playground late in the day and overnight for a while after fully fledging. I'll check back at flying time tonight. 😊

As long as we realize that that is what we're doing, it's fine and certainly understandable. But we do the owls a disservice if we project human emotions on them. They have their own owl emotions which suit their survival perfectly. If they had our emotions, they wouldn't last a day in the wild! I apologize somewhat for being a party-pooper, but that's just the way it is. They are admirable in their own right, and we must respect that!

Not uptight at all, Dave! I just want to advocate for these wonderful creatures - they're perfect in their own right and I hope people will realize that.
"For the animal shall not be measured by the man. In a world older and more complete than ours they move finished and more complete, gifted with extensions of the senses we have lost or never attained, living by voices we shall never hear. They are not brethren, they are not underlings; they are other nations, caught with ourselves in the net of life and time, fellow prisoners of the splendor and travail of the earth." - Henry Beston

Hard, but we have to do it. And it doesn't mean that there's no 'affection' there: it means that our definition of affection, with all its human implications, doesn't apply. It's difficult, but trying to understand them in their world can only make us respect them more.

Officially, Good Morning, everyone! Surprisingly, I'm not feeling the 'empty nest' thing as much as I thought I would. And I think that's because I'm feeling a great satisfaction seeing the the great circle of life cbsing in on itself. We'll never see this particular circle come to a full close because we won't be there, but we know that it will continue. Being a witness to this, at such close proximity, is immensely gratifying!

Quadruple like... I guess I enjoyed them both feeling the freedom of flight last night while they were away from the box so long, that it helped me understand they have great things ahead of them! Did rip my heart out to see Austin's indecision... I don't think I took three breaths through that timespan, but in the end, we all know he will be out with the rest SOON

Good morning MODs so glad to see we have another bonus day. Very fun and interesting day yesterday. It was great seeing Carlos and the creative group and getting to order the hard cover book (which I did). And then James creating another chat site for us on Facebook (joined that too). Many of us are starting to get that stressed out feeling like what are we going to do when the babies are off and on their own. So good that SPO is going to keep this site open for us and now we will have Facebook too. Have a great day everyone.

In the in-or-out debate: I think instinct is the driving factor - and I am not even a little worried about Wesley. These owls are remarkably strong and healthy, they are still being brought food. Austin's instinct to fully fledge is obvious, and Wesley's will be soon, as well. We are blessed with a bit more time... Life is truly wonderful, isn't it?

Hi Natalie, that's the way it works -- you get emails of comments added to what you commented or liked. I think you can go to the settings to allow or stop emails.

Oh, thank you Bette! Maybe I will try that... it's kind of a pain to have all those comments in my email box... I'd rather just go to the group site to read them. Arggh! I have a lot to learn! And one of the things my daughter told me today was NEVER to post anything I don't want everyone to see....

 Natalie, you absolutely can stop the automatic notification of comments/likes, etc. I believe Bette's right, it should be under settings, try the top blue bar & the drop down for Account, I didn't find it right away, but have in the past as I no longer get any notifications.

 natalie, you'll want to go to your settings and set it to NOT send emails, you'll be overwhelmed with them once your friends begin finding you on FB! you'll also want to set your privacy setting to either just friends or friends of friends, that will keep the world from seeing at your info. once you go there a few times, you'll figure it out. it's pretty user friendly.

 While another day in the box is great for us... I am feeling concern for both of these Owls. Austin is so bonded to Wesley he won't leave her... and they both need to start learning survival skills out of the box. So, for me, the desire to see them in the box is becoming less important than them making it in the real world.

Instinct is very strong in animals. Just think about all the survival tactics they show, even without the kind of instructions from a parent that humans would need to learn a new task. Instinct is telling this owl that he needs to leave the box and get into the trees. The bonds of the nest - and the feeding by the parents - will keep them together a while longer, but then they'll all fly off alone. Nature doesn't keep them together because the mating wouldn't be successful. And that needs to be successful in order to ensure the continuation of the species. Owls don't hang out in colonies; they are solitary until they mate. JMHO, but I think he's feeling the natural urge to move out to the trees. It's only his nest-bond with his youngest sibling that's keeping him there these last 2 days.

Instinct is strong in all creatures! I think of the worm or caterpillar, for instance. It has never observed its parents or been taught by them ever, yet can devour leaves and spin a cocoon. I'm always amazed at things like this.

The lower on the scale of brain capacity and complexity, the more pure instinct plays a role in survival, as with the worm and the caterpillar. When you get to the brains of raptors, there's an amazing complexity to them. That's where instinct and intelligence go hand in hand - intelligence indicating the capacity to learn. That's why Wesley will be forced to make a choice.

And I suspect that his nest-bond itself has more to do with the fact that it represents the safe and the known, rather than a bond with his sibling. JMHO.

I agree with you, but am not sure Wes would be sad to be alone as I don't think they feel things like we do; and Austin leaving might just be the catalyst to get Wesley on with her life too 😊 I trust that they do what they have to do when they have to do it. Hasn't failed yet.

JT, I had just woken up and logged on here and I thought I had that captured where an owlet was leaning way outside the door, but stupid IE froze up and I lost the shot. I had assumed all were staying out except for Wesley. I wish I had awakened a little bit earlier so see what all of you got to see. I just figured it was Wesley being left alone in the box the first time. The blue box stats show both in the box and many here seem to be confirming that. I agree with OwlOsaurus commentary about Wesley and the hunting skills.
