I should get to bed too. My lawn guy comes in the morning to do my yard. Actually it is my ex-boyfriend! We have been on and off for 30 years! Arg... Off now for the past 8, when I bought my own house. Also have to take Merlin to the vet for a blood draw again. Every Tuesday for a while. Good night all! I might lurk and finish my beer! Hope you all sleep well, and dream of owls! Love to all... =^..^ =

Waiting... for my daughter to get home from a school outing and for the PDF to be updated to the wiki so I can shrink it, which will come first? Hubby went to get daughter so I could watch owls, since he knows it won't be too much longer. He's a keeper! 😊

 Good night everyone, it's been a pleasure. Safe travels to the owlets we so treasure. Hope to return in the morning to their cute little faces. But the world awaits them with wide open spaces. If they are gone, it will be okay. The time will have come to fly away. Hope they live long, happy and free. And their days plentiful in an old palm tree. That a guardian angel watches them from afar. Always keeping them safe, wherever they are!

I am really going to bed now. Night owl!

Here is an interesting article I found that talks about the noise made by barn owlets and how it is a way of negotiating who gets the next treat. So all that joking aside, that may actually be what is happening - Wesley makes a big fuss to get fed!! http://www.ncti.nm.nh.gov/pnw/articles/PMC_169056/pdf/10737402.pdf

The owl who took the delivery had sat on the perch and then the fledgling and squawked for a good 15 minutes before a delivery came in from the right. The owl flew down to the landing pad to accept the delivery. The owl who delivered flew off to the right immediately. At the same time another owl flew in from the left and landed on the roof and then the landing pad. Sounds like Wesley and Austin's MO's. Wesley got the delivery and Austin flew in to try and get it.

Oh, Moly was a common barn owl, as common as she could be
She brought the world together through modern technology
Her owlets made us laugh and cry, and turned lives upside down
But the lesson that we surely learned was to care about the world around.
Moly, Moly, we watch you from afar
Moly, Moly how beautiful you are
Moly was a common barn owl, all speckled and golden brown
Her antics with ole Leggs McGee sent laughs around the town
McGee worked hard to feed their brood, and Moly was pleased it's true
And the owlets quickly fattened up and then one day they flew!
Moly, Moly and McGee McGee

Just my 2 cents... The one eating is darker chested than the one in the back, which would indicate Wesley Anne is eating, and Austin has Always waited for her to eat because he knows he will get food too. He has battled off Patton before to ensure Wesley gets enough to eat to continue to grow into a Strong and Healthy young lady...Again, just my thoughts from hours of observation for the past few weeks... 😊

Not this time. I watched and grabbed screenshots. The owl on the perch was watching the incoming parent (likely McGee) for several seconds before he arrived. The hand-off was quick and then the adult was out of there.

Chris in Olympia, I don't live in Northern Oregon, that is Darlene Salisbury that does! 😊 I live in Bend, in Central Oregon, which is 3 hours from Portland and six hours from Seattle area.... I still need to google the Nisqually site, this chat room is going too fast for me, LOL!

We haven't seen it rain since the owlets started flying but, when they were younger the adults did fly and hunt in the rain. My guess is they would still do so, I don't see why that would change now. Wesley's calls are what drives the adults to bring food, and I doubt he would stop if it started raining.

Good night everyone, it's been a pleasure.
Safe travels to the owlets we so treasure.
Hope to return in the morning to their cute little faces.
But the world awaits them with wide open spaces.
If they are gone, it will be okay.
The time will have come to fly away.
Hope they live long, happy and free.
And their days plentiful in an old palm tree.
That a guardian angel watches them from afar.
Always keeping them safe, wherever they are!

I now know what the inside of a headless rat looks like. It was not something I was looking for to know but found it on the garage floor today. Those insides must be pretty tasty to owls but OMG not very pleasant to see. Also now know that is how they get there liquids. I tossed the thing over the fence and I am sure a hawk or raven had a tasty lunch of it.

To fill in the time... I've had a strange few days. My parents flew in from Texas and are here for the summer, we helped move them into their summer condo from our "cubset" on Sunday. My friend with spinal cancer started leaking spinal fluid on Saturday, and today at 3 she went into surgery again to fix that and just got off the phone with her husband. Daughter is going through freakout because her field trip was canceled but she has her piano recital on Wednesday and just listened to another practice.

I can't seem to spend any time here because too much is happening but it's almost the end. WAAAAHHHHH!

OK, thanks for the vent. I'll be fine. 😊

Sorry for all of that Kathryn. I have a very good idea of all the pressure you are under. I still haven't fully got ten settled since coming home from FL in early May. Spring yard work is way behind, housework is on hold, have been "down" over the death of my brother last Fall and am still dealing with recovery and recuperation issues of our son-in-law who was in a terrible, life-threatening motorcycle accident on Easter week end. He is home, but recovery will take a long time. Our daughter is handling things very well between work and caring for him and I'm trying to be more supportive of her right now as I sense a "melt-down" coming from all the stress she has been under. Being here for a few hours a day has been my own stress relief and therapy.

I'm going to wager that they both return again in the am. My prediction is for Austin to stay out tomorrow night/morning and Wes will spend 1 day inside on his own before he too gives up the box for good. Or at least during the day. I think they will all keep returning at night, to perch on the perches and box for quite some time. It's like their own little hangout in San Marcos.

You Westerners don't know how lucky you are! We on the East Coast are all walking around with bags and circles under our eyes, we prob all look like the Night of the Walking Dead. All because of our dedication to these lucubus feathered wonderchicks. And what's more, none of us would give up ONE MINUTE of the viewing time. If you were fortunate enough to see the KissyFest tonight, you'll know it was worth everything we have had to put up with. So, we're ready to be pooped to the end.....we can get in some naps when all the babies are out into their own owl world where they belong. And God Bless'em and keep them safe.

Did anyone get a fullscreen capture of the sky, just before the camera (OB2) switched over to B&W? Please say yes.

I've been wanting to get two shots, very close together in sequence, to make a nice image. Thought I had it tonight, until I opened the shots just now. I managed to grab the fading, yet still present, warning dialog in the color shot. 😊

Thanks all. And thanks for the offer, Ingrid. I really need them to be from the same time period, as close together as possible. That way the douds/shades match on each frame. I have a different plan in mind from what I posted, and simply converting the color one to B&W won't work.

One more post before I go into oblivion - The beginning of one of my favorite poems by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and it puts me in mind of this owl experience. You can Google it if you aren't familiar. Interestingly, HWL lived with his uncle for a time in the town I grew up in and the Longfellow house there has been restored.

BETWEEN the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to bower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations,
That is known as the Children's Hour.

I hear in the chamber above me
The patter of little feet,
The sound of a door that is opened,
And voices soft and sweet.

She flew in to the owl box,
like she was flying on to a yacht,
her wings strategically tipped toward the sky,
her breast, it was apricot.

She had one eye on the rodents as she watched them all run off

I had some dreams they were owls in the owl box, owls in the owl box....

and... Take it Colleen!

Today will make 18 days since Austin stepped out... 14 days for Wesley. TimeLine Stats: Stepping out dates: Max -May 15/16; Patti - May 16/17; Austin- May 20/21; Wesley- May 24/25... Didn't return to box for day: Max -May 30/31; Patti - May 31/June 1;

May they have a wonderful fun night of hunting and flying! Blessings to all the MOD's too...James, by the way...I thought you were about 45 so, not too far of if (if you really are 42) 😊 posting again for those who don't want to scroll into the basement:

the south african "transformer owl" is cool because it changes its response based on the strength of the other bird. It's about 20cm tall. the first owl they bring out (they call it a mask owl, but it sure looks like a barn owl to me!) is about 35cm and looks like a kind of a pushover, so the transformer owl gets big to scare it away; for the "eagle owl," which is much bigger, it knows it'll get beat, so it tries to look like a tree branch. that's why it keeps rotating its body as the other owl is walked around -- trying to keep the narrow part facing the scary guy!

Haven't been there yet. We are trying to plan a get together at Point Defence Zoo. Not sure of a date yet. The 19 or 26 of this month. You game?

My friend who is know for rescuing owls and other raptors and even snakes got a call today about an owl nest in a mans chimney. He had been gone for awhile in Alaska and came home to a smell that was not very appealing. She said she would go up on the roof to take a look but unless they are in trouble she is not going to move them and let them grow and fledge on their own. He will just have to put up with the smell and then he can cover the chimney when they are gone.

He is a nice man and doesn't want them to come to any harm so that is good. I will let you know tomorrow night the end of this saga.

Nothing worse than the yowl of a coyote or a pack of them. The coyotes we have here in Maine never sound like the coyote noises around San Marcos. I like all animals, but coyotes are probably my least favorite. I have seen what they do to a white-tailed deer in the winter when they chase it out onto a frozen lake where they have the advantage of firm footing. Very unpleasant and gruesome to watch. Yes, I know - survival of the fittest, the food chain, etc.

 probably depends partially on environment? isn't the one that lengthens itself trying to blend in with tree trunks? and maybe the barn owls are trying to blend in with....um....the clouds (just kidding on the last part).

 the cool thing for this owl is that it changes its response based on the strength of the other bird. It's about 20cm tall. the first owl (they call it a mask owl, but it sure looks like a barn owl to me!) is about 35cm and looks like kind of a pushover, so it gets big to scare it away; for the "eagle owl," which is much bigger, it knows it'll get beat, so it tries to look like a tree branch that's why it keeps rotating its body as the other owl is walked around -- trying to keep the narrow part facing the scary guy!

 Hello owl clan!!!! Just in from the evening. A condo unit has begun in a new pine tree - 2 feet from the song sparrow nest is now a morning dove sitting upon her 2 white eggs. The wrens are singing and nesting like crazy - and the orioles are BUSY! ... and I saved this lil' guy from ... 'er ... my dog. ={ ... SO reminded me of our owlettes as it fledged out on a branch a foot from it's nest. ...

 Hello everyone, I am back after sitting on the deck for a couple of hours trying to regain my vitamin D. I had some upsetting news from my daughter when I got home from work. They are ending school three days early next week and they don't get to do their all day bike-riding/swimming/observatory trip. She's been crying. This trip was to make up for not going to OMSI science center in Portland, which is a tradition at the school every year for the "graduating" fifth graders. Apparently school is ending early to balance the budget for next year, but they just announced this fact today.

I need the owl and yowlz to cheer us up!

 I know she doesn't mind "school" ending early, but she was really looking forward to the observatory. She loves planetariums! And of course swimming and biking would have been a bonus. She really wanted to go to OMSI, which was the original trip, so this was going to be the next best thing. Rats, double rats.

Hi Marla, yes I did a quick checkin earlier on my hubby's laptop, that was before I heard the news. 😞

 Wow! I can imagine she is upset. They couldn't want the kids a bit earlier, or at least give the parents a "heads up"? Maybe the two of you or a few of her friends can do something special instead. I know that can be hard to arrange, but it is so special to have those "rites of passage". I am so sorry to hear that.

 Sorry for the unexpected cancellation of your daughter's trip, Kathryn. It's hard on kids at that age when they have their heart set on something. Unfortunately, school budget cuts are affecting schools across the country. I know that won't make her feel any better.

 The schools should mobilize the PTA or affiliated organizations to step in and organize school-like activities for the kids to replace these lost days. It wouldn't take a lot of intelligence to make this up to the students!

 It seems Austin has been flying off at night to watch reruns of MTV Classics - probably peeking through the neighbor's windows.
 I think he fancies one of their more colorful celebrities!

Aaaannndddd, I'M BACK!! Hello, my lovelies. I've missed you today. Looks like our littles are resting up for a big night.
SLEEP-TALKING HUBBY STORY:
Wes and Austin had flown off, and I had decided to try to get more sleep last night. So I turned the computer off, and as I was putting it away, I heard hubby kinda mumble "huhhhh?". I said something like "The kids are gone for the night. Im coming to bed".
Still sleeping, he reaches over, in that you-know-what-that-means kinda way and says:
"hooonnnneeyyy, the kids are gone...."
Do I need to mention that he fell right back asleep?

In addition to checking out Carlos' photos on <http://mollysbox.wordpress.com/oba/>, be sure to check the wiki page <http://mollyowl.tworks.com/> - especially under "Photos" for a wonderful slide show I hat James Hill has put together. Hi Y'all! It's great to see our two sleeping and being so cute! Jade got a big kick this afternoon when both of them were trying to get something off of Austin's foot! I'm not going to stay up too late tonight. Have been tired all day (I did get the joyous pleasure of see all four together last night, about 1a.m. our time) 😊

I was "lucky"...Jade was terrified of toys that talked or made any noise (except a snowman that sang "Frosty")! So, I never had to live through this type of "festation". Sorry you do....but, someday a LONG time fromnow...you'll look back with fondness on this time (at least that's what I've always been told). Now that Jade is 12...they were right! 😊
