Good morning! As "far behind" as Wes seemed during the growing up process, Wes has really caught up and appears strong and well. The hatch order can't be helped and does dictate the maturity schedule. I imagine in a few days Wes will be free of the box, fledge from home and be free as the wind and do as owls do. What an educational experience this has been and everyone who has contributed to the postings here has made this event extra special!

Good morning all! As I wrote last night, I was a bad hostess and kept sneaking away from our friends to check out the owls, went to bed at 1:45am and got up at 8:00 and anxiously went straight to the computer to see if our beautiful girl came back--Yea, there she is!

Good morning, I did a quick check after getting up this morning to see what the day may hold. It was good to see our little Diva Wesley is honoring us with at least one for day of her beauty. She hatched 3 days after Austin so there might even be one more day after today. Her little internal clock will tell her and us when she is ready to face the world head on. So many emotions were felt last night as the thought of the empty owl box. It is hard to imagine our days ahead with-out checking in over and over to see what these little owls are up to. We will survive though with great memories and maybe some e-books, mugs t-shirts etc. to help keep the memory alive.

Ok I will share with you what I told the night crew. I think it would be great if when this is over we all send Carls and Donna snail mail to thank them. Some of us have signed the e-card and some have already went them notes and other things. When they get back from their long awaited vacation their mail box will be stuffed! What do ya think? I am going to do it anyway, but I was just thinkin'.

When Wesley was on the platform earlier this morning during her little pounce practice, I was cracking up! I think I will miss these owlets little antics most of all. What a ride this has been and I thought for a little while this morning that it was over, but I guess Miss Diva Wesley hasn't felt the pull strong enough from her instincts to leave yet. More the better for us, but I know it will come when the activity of all the owlets will be out of our view and will just have to imagine and wish them the best. They got a great head start from their parents.

love all the details, stats, etc., but the thought of examining the owls with a fine-toothed comb came to mind (in a loving manner, of course). did you know they have a built-in comb? I bet everyone knows this by now, but here, anyway:
"The Tytonidae family is also unique among owls for having what is known as a "pectinate claw". This is a comb-like, serrated structure that runs along the inner tabular edge of the third digit. It is generally thought to aid in preening and is also found on herons, egrets, bitterns and nightjars."
p.s. oh, and their tracks really are XX - that, with their heart-shaped face, no wonder they've generated so much love. :D
have a nice day, all....

Try Africa or the Western PA cam. Very nice sounds. You can also buy CDs of birdsong (not the bird identification ones but ones done outside in a meadow or forest so you get everything). I have a couple and they are nice to listen to in the winter.

I'm watching our babies and the Dutch babies at the same time. Kinda makes it hard to call ours "babies" anymore. The Dutch daddy is in the box with momma and the 5 owlets. I think the littlest one is a quarter the size of whatever Austin just ate!

He doesn't post much. When he does, it's usually in red (or orange). You'll know him by that 00 and by name. 😊

OMG. I just came back after a few hours and I'm so gld to see 2 of them together. I'm in pain from the root canal this morning so I'm going to hit the pain bottle and hit the hay. I really enjoyed spending the day with so many of you and chit-chatting, sharing, laughs, etc. MODs truly are a special group of people and you couldn't ask for a better bunch. I've learned more in the last few months about compassion and humanity and most importantly, owls and nature. Here's to each of you a good evening, good health, and happiness always. 😊😊😊😊

P.S. If anyone got a screen shot of Wesley exiting the owl box tonight, could you post it for me?
