Live Barn Owl Nest Box Cam - San Marcos, CA

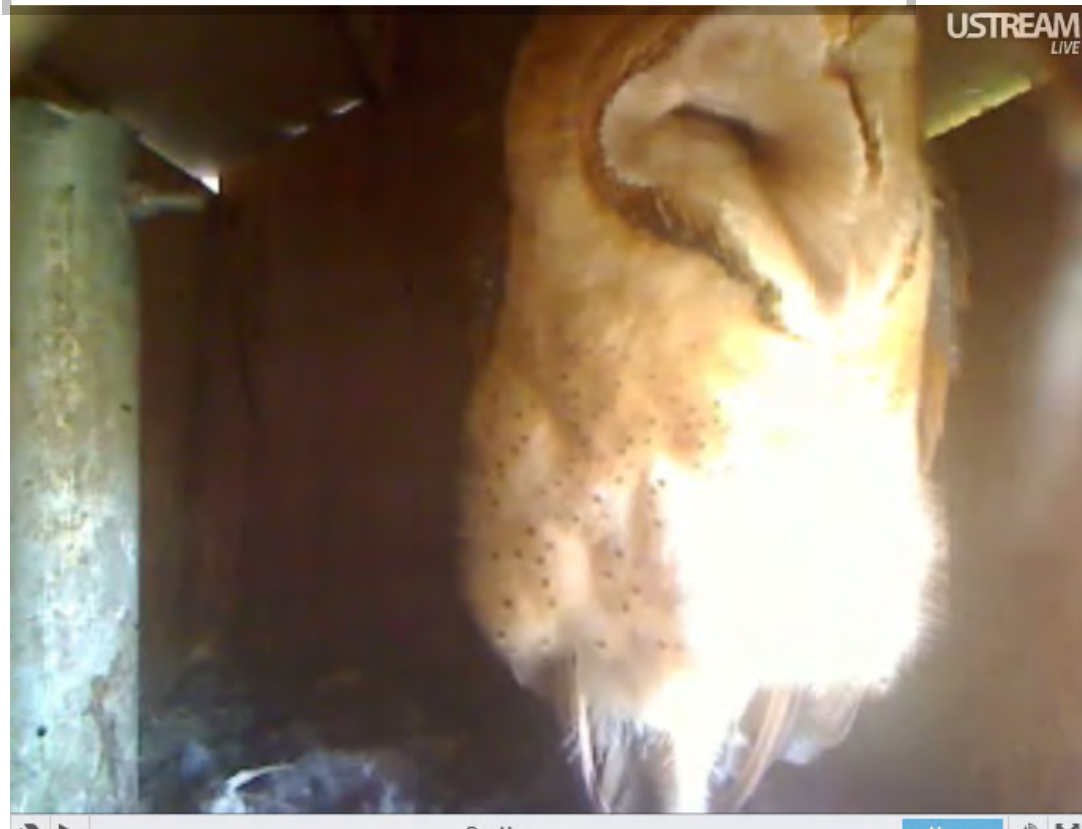

This is a live feed of a wild female barn owl named Molly. The owl box is located 15 feet off the ground. The male (McGee) has a white chest and face. He usually shows up after dark but has spent an entire day with the female. For more information about the owls and this cam. Click Here

 You know what? I know I'm pooped, but Wesley reminds of a stick of cotton candy! Esp. on one leg! I think I'm going downstairs for some ice cream. I'll be back!

 I came to this site expecting nothing more than a picture of an owl. I leave with the joy of having witnessed a miracle. Not a miracle of nature - the birth and fledging of barn owls has gone on for time out of mind. But the miracle of community. Led by a pair of barn owls doing what nature tells them to do, a man who selflessly showed us their world, and a group of individuals that had a "common" interest - and an uncommon ability to make me laugh, cry, learn, care, and wonder. As this beautiful owl takes her place in the world, I will watch with joy, even though a very tiny bit of my heart is breaking. She leaves us a box full of wonderful memories, and a look into the future. A future in which our babies will thrive and grow and raise their own brood. I can't really be sad for that. And as we wind down, I can tell you one thing for sure: I have NEVER spit so much out of my nose in my life!

 Hello from Cincinnati... I am guessing our little baby slept all day... I know the many times I visited, she was sleeping. Will be interesting to see how quickly she exits tonight since I assume she has an empty belly by now.

 Anyone else think it's funny that we are so worried about Wesley being alone?! I understand that these owls are loners until they mate, so this is what life will be like once they all leave the nest and the area for good. They will live alone until they find a mate. Don't get me wrong, I find myself wondering how lonely she is, but then I laugh at myself for making Wesley so 'human'!

 Hi everyone... Been gone all day - working at elections office - sure missed watching Wesley-Anne today... Kept thinking of her and wondering how she felt all alone in the box 😊 Also wondering how Austin felt being out in the fresh air and palm branches today. I'll never keep my eyes open long enough to read all that I've missed today. Just have to start where we are and hope they all come back to visit tonight.

 Ordering for the hardback books will go for about 2 weeks for the first edition, but don't hold off, because that is just an estimate.

Only deadline I know is for Operation Face Plant - the CD for Carlos - at midnight tonight. For more info, go to Kate, we've all spent 3 months reading things into what we think we're observing, but with 2 major handicaps: (1) we're not owls, and (2) we've never watched owls before, therefore have no prior point of reference. I wish we could move on to another owl family, now that we've learned so much about their growth and behavior! It would be tremendous fun to compare another family with Molly and McGee's!

But primarily, I drink to all of you who have made this journey together. I really cannot imagine a better group of people with whom I could have watched the journey—you are simply the best. Humor, supportiveness, common interests, education, culture—it's all been there. And a special clink of the glass to those of you here who have worked so hard to organize us and keep us informed—you know who you are. Thank you, from the bottom of my heart.

My FB account is the one that crashed when I signed on. Haven't been on in so long that it asked me all these questions - I did what my Momma always told me to do - say no. So now I have no interests and look like a boring person. KET are initials - E stands for middle name Erin. Picture is the only picture taken of me in 5 years with my eyes open - I amight sensitive. Lovely blue school denim shirt. Enough hints?? I kept threatening to use a sketch artist for my obituary since I have no decent pictures.

No sleep-talking story from last night - I was too hard asleep to hear him. But I will tell you a hubby and owl story from last year: I have NEVER seen an owl in the wild. That's right, NEVER! In zoos, raptor centers, etc., but never in a natural setting. Hubby and I were camping, and had gone to bed in the tent when I heard it... the unmistakable sound of two owls hooting. Certain that this was finally it, I quietly left the tent and sat outside, listening to the sound of the two talking to each other, and coming closer and closer to the trees I was sitting near. After about a half an hour or more, the owls were THISCLOSE, and I knew that they were in the tree, so I was just looking up silently, waiting to see them. Just then, hubby comes stumbling out of the tent, with TWO flashlights, one in each hand, waved them around in the trees and said "ARE THOSE OWLS?!"

"Not any more...."

OH YEAH - a story from CAR before I go to bed. My day is complete. Well, here's mine. I was driving through the subdivision in the district where I teach. I saw an owl on the power line. (There is a barn in the lone farm that has not been developed in the area. I can only hope he belonged there.) So I did what any normal person would do. I get out and stand under him... I chatted with him. I asked him to please hork a pellet as we disset pellets every year. All was fine... I had a grand old time until the guy in the house came and stood in his picture window and stared at me. Guess he didn't appreciate me appreciating the owl.

Lourdes,
I the basement, you asked: "Does anyone know how owls find their mates?"
From what I read, they identify future mates by yelling (well screeching).
I have a copy of one answer in the photo (and the URL).

I posted this on the new SPO-MOD facebook page too but thought it might get a wider audience here. I'm looking for opinions and I know this group has several! LOL This is a picture of my backyard and I'm thinking of mounting a screech owl nest box on top of the arbor, against one of the posts. I'm thinking that the owlets could branch along the arbor and I could even put a small platform one end near the box so they could just walk out there. They would also have the small cypress tree to get into - the branches of that touch the arbor. And also the large live oak to the left of the picture - It's really about 15 - 20 feet from the arbor. Open areas for them to hunt around, including the golf course across the pond. I hear screech owls all the time so I know they are around. What do you think? Enough protection from predators? High enough?

It looks like the arbor might be kind of easy to climb -- do you have raccoons around? the ones where I grew up could get up that easily. I bet a box mounted on a pole next to it would be a bit safer, but it looks like such a nice branching playground!

Looks like you have space enough - pretty yard BTW. Can't advise whether you should or shouldn't, but I agree with emily's observation about predators climbing the arbor. I can't remember where you live, Owlb, so don't know what predators you have.

Wow, you a beautiful yard! My backyard is a jungle! Every year I cut back and out back, and every year it grows back! Mother Nature's revenge. This past weekend I started on one section and found 8 birds nests. I immediately removed them. There are barn owls, bluejays, a mockingbird, and no telling what else. So I worked in another part. I thought about an owl house as there are storm owls here. But I worry about the snakes. That's the main reason I fight the scrub oaks, etc. After all this, I think you should go for it! You certainly love them. 😊

Thank you, Owlo. But I write just like I shoot pictures - At random and in spurts. Mostly happens when I wake up inspired and just start rattling things off over coffee or stumble out of bed and house with the camera, completely unplanned. Problem is, I then spend the rest of the day tweaking and reworking something until I feel like it's almost notable. By then I've sort of lost the spark about my subject and leave many items unfinished and unseen - both prose and images. Oddly enough, I tend to write my most passionate pieces of punditry and prose over an image that I'm particularly fond of or an absurdity which astounds me. Vivid imagery seems to be my catalyst, quite literally. 😊

Hi Adam,
It is REALLY a reach for your Bible school, but the other Wesley (in Wesley the Owl) washed his own face in water, drank water and loved to take a bath in the bathtub. Barn Owls are not supposed to do that.
He did it because his "Mother" was the human he bonded to when she got him as a 4 day old chick. He learned to do what she did.
You could tie it to "Train up a child in the way he should go."

I respectfully disagree. I suspect that barn owls are like any other owl, in that they do take baths and drink water, out in the wild and without human intervention or training. There are many references on the internet to barn owls (and other types) drowning in livestock water troughs. Molly even came home soaking wet one night when it was not raining. Her first long venture away from the box after the owlets hatched. Me thinks that Wesley did have many human inspired behaviors, but bathing and drinking are not likely to be two of them.

I raised birds, parakeets, cockatiels, and finches and I can tell you from experience and from research that almost every species of bird bath at some point or another. Dirt in their feathers would hamper their ability to fly and those who live in very warm climates often "bath" to cool off. We see that a lot here in central Texas (our bird baths are always busy)...we've seen everything from chickadees, and sparrows to wood peckers in our backyard.

There are many references on the internet to Barn Owls taking a bath and your point about drowned owls is well taken. I'll try again to find the reference I read that said Barn Owls did not take baths or drink water.
Guess your info blows the Bible school connection.

Yes, that particular article was quoted here many times during the discussions over our wet Molly. Many folks believed something horrible had to have happened, for her to return to the nest box soaking wet. Since that night, I've witnessed McGee hunting as usual in the rain, and Carlos even mentioned that McGee sat on top of the nest box in the rain for a good long while, when his usual haunt in the palm tree would surely have been a more protected area. I don't discount that the barn owls have difficulty flying when they are soaked, but I do not think they shy away from water nearly as much as some would have you believe.

Just here for a sec, I'll be back later tonight - but as I logged on, and saw the picture, I smiled wide. The little one is no longer our baby, or our owl. This is an owl. A healthy, strong, beautiful owl, resting up for her flight into the evening skies. I take great joy in all that this site has brought to me, (especially all of you!) but I think I take even greater joy in knowing that Molly and McGee turned out to be such stellar parents, and that their brood will take their places in the world and breed even more strong, healthy owls. It has been a great ride!

So, what ever happened to the swallow-food-whole routine? I haven't seen that behavior in ages (maybe I've just missed it). They seem to have been mostly picking and tearing at their food lately. The last time that I saw a swallow-whole, Wes was just a week or so old. Curious.

That's true, I think. I haven't seen that behavior in a long time. Also, I wondered if they "preferred" one "treat" over another. I know they hunt for what they can get, but I wonder if one is more nutritious or otherwise favored over another.

Their recent witnessed meals have been mostly larger prey.

Rats and Rabbits are too rotund to ravage without ripping them apart.

They still are swallowing Parts of rabbits and rats whole. But they do pick them apart first. Always have. Even the famous video of Moly Swallowing a Rabbit Whole is actually a headless young bunny. The owlets seen swallowing rabbits (I have pics with the feet still sticking out) are usually consuming what's left of a carcass. Still, they are swallowing pretty big chunks. Would certainly make me gag!

Well, I'm glad I'm not alone here. 😊

It just baffles me when people talk about how lonely and sad she appears. I am going to chalk it up to just another case of humans projecting their own feelings/insecurities onto a wild animal. It happens when they think the owls are being "kissy" so I guess it's the same way when they aren't. Maybe the folks who are seeing sadness and loneliness here should take a few moments to try and figure out why they see it that way. I see complete freedom and unadulterated innocence, without a care in the world. Would be nice to attain some of that back, again.

As I mentioned in a morning post today, I am fledging myself tomorrow. However, I will be taking the Owlets and their parents with me and I just wanted to let you know in case you don't see them and wonder where they are. 😊 That is - taking my laptop with lots of photos so I can reflect back on their journey and remember the different stages I have collected. I think Wesley is doing remarkable today being all alone and I bet by tomorrow if she returns to the owl box alone, she will have being alone down pat. Being by yourself and in solitude sometimes is a good thing. Brings lots of peace and serenity. She may be enjoying the quiet hours and then will be excited to see her siblings and parents. I will chat with you all later.

If only LOU!!! I'll be checking the barn where I work tomorrow though - we've had Barn Owls in the past there as there are pellets all over the floor but I don't think there's any this year - I keep checking in hope though and I'm definitely going to collect some of the pellets and dissect them - If I do find evidence of owls I'll definitely be trying to take some pictures and let you all know!!!

The only thing more annoying than Barney is the concept that some feel the need to point out how much they dislike that song and must share with all the notion that they are pressing mute. Here is a link that should be music to your ears. 😊 <http://bit.ly/9W050l>

Let me tell you how sweet my hubby is. One of my cats has been missing since Sat night. Hubby does not like cats. Especially in the house. Guess where my cats are? Well, when he heard Charlie was missing he got on the golf cart and drove all around checking the road and ditches. And woke me up last night to ask if I had checked the sheds. He's so sweet I think I will keep him. Already kept him for 39 years. Charlie has been known to get stuck in a tree for 3-4 days but always where I could find him. So there is still a chance he is in a tree farther away than I have looked. His full name is Charles Bronson for you older ones. 😊

Now when I see those early pics of Molly, she seems smaller than her almost-grown girls...how did she ever "stuff" all four owlets under her for so long...I wonder...I know she did it...! Remember when she started raising up higher to fit them all underneath...and the "big girls" would sort of stick their heads and shoulders under her tail feathers...so cute...!

Okay, I am going to go with this one - the content one. Can't stand to think she is not. I think Wesley knows it is not her time yet. She is just spending her day getting ready mentally. She knows her family will be waiting for her. I'd rather she be here and "lonely" than out there and not ready and someone's prey. Plus, I come here for stress release and happiness. So I am going with the half full glass rather than half empty. Let's go with "anticipating!"

Just curious - a bit of info online and from early Carlos-warnings - remind us to not label an owl's gender too early, yet it appears there is a consensus now built upon info such as markings? Are we sure of their genders?

Today, 14:12:47 - Flag - Like - Reply

Three of them seem to have very distinctive markings: Wesley and Max are amber and spotted. Austin is very pale - almost white across his chest. Patti is the one no one is sure about yet. Pale but speckled.

I did read where there is white... it will always be white. SO I think Pat tson & Austin are males. Pat tson's dark throat & spots can molt away. I also think Max & Wesley are female. They are darker in the face, chest & legs. We could be surprised though.

I'm glad we can all keep in touch. My family and friends don't know how involved I've been with this, and certainly wouldn't understand the sadness. It's actually worse than a favorite tv show ending because it's real, and because we talk to a whole group of friends who also love it, while watching! My husband has watched on and off, and has listened when I tell him each day what's going on with the owls, so he will understand a little... so that's good. I know we'll always have this memory and we've all learned a lot, and probably will care even more about nature and wildlife, and that's a good thing.

Thanks everyone! The owls are very comforting & allow me a little down time. Memorial service this Saturday. It's all been pretty bittersweet. It's been nice to see Wes here again today, but I've learned that nature has her own timetable to keep and as much as we don't want things to change, they always do, and usually for the best. 😊

Isn't it funny that although some of us have watched this spectacular event from hatching to fledging and today's technology has captured it all, we still aren't sure when it will be over! We've all been guessing, "It'll be this is the last night to see them", "I think Austin will stay out tonight", "I think the others will come back", "I think they will both stay out together" etc. etc. etc. No matter how good humans are with technology nature is awesome - the mystery lies within! It will be so missed but, I'm glad it's going to be a good ending, the way nature intended!

Gabrielle, and others, I understand your concerns about facebook although they have improved privacy settings there. But you don't need to put anything on there you don't want shared. Make up a name if you don't want to use your real one. No body is checking passports! Pets and other animals have facebook pages. Ideas and locations have facebook pages. If you don't want to use it, then don't. But you aren't required to sacrifice your privacy to do it.

I'm going to miss them too. But I think people are either "clingers" or "releasers". My family is tight, but we let go. My sister told her only daughter that she could go to college anywhere she wanted to go--as long as it was away. She could not stay home, it was time to fledge. If Molly and McGee hadn't fledged, we wouldn't have experienced these babies. Here's to many more generations of barn owls flying free!

These are wild owlets (they are not pets or domesticated). They sleep in palm trees. So the answer is Yes! Barn owls (as you can tell by their name) always live near humans, even in the "wild". If they live where palm trees grow apparently they will perch there.

This is bittersweet!

Molly & McGee successfully raised all four owlets & we all went along for the ride.

Friendships were forged over the past few months & young Wesley stands alone in that box. It is Wesley that will cut the umbilical cord that brought all of us here. Godspeed Wesley. And Godspeed to all of you that turned this little room into a home.

Yes, I made my daily visits here to check on the 4 amigos with minimal involvement with the room.

But I think it is just terrific what you folks have done here. You know who you are.

This was & I believe will always be the most active room Sportsman's Paradise ever had.

I wish Molly, McGee & their brood as long a life that they can have.

Carlos & Donna Royal. Thank you. I trust & hope we will see you again.

God bless you all & thanks for everything.

I posted this as a reply to an earlier post but will repost here as Lynn just posted and feels pretty much I feel today...

I have only posted a couple times since the beginning of this journey but watched this site daily. I have been growing sad and lonely. Molly 1st left the box knowing it was only a matter of time until the babies were gone themselves. I've been so melancholy all day since Wesley is alone in the box. I don't want her to be alone but will be so sad when she too is gone.

Carlos and his family have done an amazing thing sharing this with everyone. I'm sad to see it coming to an end.

Wesley as we watch it all come to an end
We've all had so much time to lend..
To worrying if you would get to eat..
As your siblings would always get the best seat..
But look at you now.. so tall and so proud..
No more for you is there a crowd...
They've all flown the coop, as one would say...
And know that soon, soon, it will be your day...
So we bid you farewell.. and wish you the best..
As you move forward on your journey..and now it's our time to rest!

Dianne Z in Rome.....No....I have difficulty with some of the drugs you have to take for the rest of your life associated with transplants.
I'm so at peace with my life, my journey and some day we will discard these containers of our souls. It's not sad for me except that for the sadness left in my wake. I have wonderful, understanding friends and we've had good conversations about the inevitable that awaits us all. It's like watching little Wes: she's about to leave her box. she'll hopefully live a healthy long life of many (19 maybe?) years and then she'll die.
Don't get gloomy or doomy: celebrate, SMILE! love, enjoy, appreciate, embrace, be who You'd want you to be. and remember JUST DANCE!

I love your attitude. I'm physically healthy and not afraid of death. Sometimes I look forward to it, although I'm not suicidal. For me, it's very exciting to think about what lies ahead. Did you ever hear the old story about a puppy in the other room while the believing doctor examines the atheist patient?
I'm the puppy who is excited about seeing her Master even though I don't know what's on the other side. Going to sleep now. You now have another prayer warrior -- that's me. Good night.

I have only posted a couple times since the beginning of this journey but watched this site daily. I have been growing sad since Molly 1st left the box knowing it was only a matter of time until the babies were gone themselves. I've been so melancholy all day since Wesley is alone in the box. I don't want her to be alone but will be so sad when she too is gone.

Carbs and his family have done an amazing thing sharing this with everyone. I'm sad to see it coming to an end. 😊

I was wondering the same thing and wondering if one reason she did it was because she felt secure with another owl with her but she knows better than to do it alone. Carbs said he'd been reading that other owl watchers have noticed that the baby lies down on the floor to sleep.

Hi, everyone. I just peeked in for a moment before I begin my next project for the day. Is anybody else feeling like every single thing that little Wesley is doing today is fraught with significance? It's like "this might be the last time we ever see her sleeping at the doorway," "this might be the last time we ever see her preening her feathers," "this might be the last time we ever see her nibble at a rat's tail." I'm not sure I can go through this again if she decides to stay another day.

I thought Wes would be more agitated today - walking back and forth, looking out the door, that sort of thing. But she's been sleeping and very calm. Even now, preening, she seems very content. I think we forget, because we've seen them acting so affectionate, that owls are mostly solitary creatures. I think she'll move to the palm tomorrow or the next day at the latest, but Wes seems perfectly OK with being alone today.

I watch much more than I post. I just wanted to add in my 2 cents. I happened upon this site when I was in a very bad place. I was pretty close to being diagnosed with a life threatening disease. many many times this wonderful owl family kept me from feeling sorry for myself. their beauty and innocence was captivating. I find out for sure about my health on monday the 14th. I pray this day will be the beginning of a new chapter for both the owls and for me. doing it together seems to have given me more hope than ever. thank you all for your dedication to this once in a lifetime experience Today, 12:00:16 - Flag - Like - Reply

Bless your heart. We'll be praying for you get better and to have peace and joy while going through this rough time. I worked as a home health nurse in the past (I don't anymore, I have Rheumatoid Arthritis and can't do that kind of work anymore) and the biggest factor in patients getting better and not giving in to depression was their mindset and support from family and friends. Make sure you join the facebook that James has set up and keep us posted on things so we can pray for you and encourage you too. 😊 Today, 12:09:38 - Flag - Like - Reply

Marcia, we will all be keeping you in our prayers until you hear from your Dr. I only started to post 2 days ago, because I'm not able to do 2 things at once, and I prefered watching our wonderful babies. My husband says I can't walk and chew gum at the same time. I have a chronic pain condition, and these past 3 months I have had this beautiful piece of nature, which has brought me peace. I am so much more relaxed thanks to our Owls and Owlets, that my husband is ready to put up boxes and cameras all over the place. This has brought so much to so many people, that it proves miracles are all around us. God Bless. Today, 12:35:22 - Flag - Like - Reply

Who would have believed when we started that we would get so hooked? I don't think anything other than my own family has gotten me this involved in a long time to the point where I was on multiple times a day. I'm not as sad seeing just 1 owl as I thought I would be. I think this is because it occurs to me they are still hanging out at night together. Molly & McGee are still involved in their lives and if he would out of the box he would be sleeping by himself in some tree. So for me now, it's more just a logistical thing that he's staying in the box. I feel like they've all grown up healthy and I feel good that baring some horrible accident they should do well!

What a bizarre way to begin one's day; much less, stretched across two. Weather guys preach prediction; Nay, they ALERT, ADVISE, and WARN, more wintry white stuff approaches. Alas, my view only predeprates scorn.

I've seen people apologizing for wanting Wes to stick around a while longer, people saying they know they shouldn't feel sad for this to be ending, etc. But I think we all want the owls to go forward and do what they are supposed to do; we want them to survive and thrive. We naturally worry about the life they will likely experience because we care about them and we've learned enough to know their lives might be hard. It's normal to feel sadness when you see something ending that you've enjoyed, even if you know it's ending for the right reasons. So don't feel bad if you are experiencing joy and sadness at the same time. Life is complex; that's part of what makes it so much fun.

That reminds me when someone posted the most hilarious comment. It was similar pt like this one (probably of Max or Paterson back then) and it was an owl stretching and then they said, "well, also a squirt for the owl". ha. I cannot remember who posted that but I laughed for quite some time.

Yeah, it's kind of hard, isn't it? I am so overwhelmingly grateful that we were given this gift, and I knew all along that it would end, but it still is a melancholy happiness... I'm so excited about their flight - is there anything more right in the world than watching them take their place in nature? But the camaraderie of this site will be gone, and I mourn the loss of that. FB is great, but it really won't be the same. A unique time and experience - such a blessing - and my heart is full, but just a tiny bit of it is breaking...
