I am back from ordering a mug from cafe press. Thank you Owls!!! (I think it was you who had ordered!) I got the one Owl did. with Max and Patti in the palm tree, and also one of Merlin! I don't mean to be a copy cat, but I tried 10 or so different pictures, and that one is perfect! Thank you! Love that site! Picture is of my Merlin mug!

The owls are about to start their lives and be the best owls they can be. We should be happy for them because they are doing what nature intends. I, for one, believe that they will be successful and happy. They got a good start in life, and I think that they will go on to lead happy, productive owl lives.

I think what is getting to me is the fact that I have been HERE every single day for the last 3 months! I am a creature of habit and the thought of an empty box is just throwing me for a loop! I really am happy and proud for their good health and for their outside freedom but 'letting go' is so hard! 😊😊

Who would have believed when we started that we would get so hooked? I don't think anything other than my own family has gotten me this involved in a long time to the point where I was on multiple times a day. I think in part it was because we knew it was for a short time only. If we knew we could always see them, we wouldn't have been so obsessed.

I'm not as sad seeing just 1 owl as I thought I would be. I think this is because it occurs to me they are still hanging out as normal together. Molly & McGee are still involved in their lives and if he would out of the box he would be sleeping by himself in some tree. So far so now, it's more just a logistics thing that he's staying in the box. I feel like they've all grown up healthy and I feel good that baring some horrible accident they should do well!

I've seen people apologizing for wanting Wes to stick around a while longer, people saying they know they shouldn't feel sad for this to be ending, etc. But I think we all want the owls to go forward and do what they are supposed to do; we want them to survive and thrive. We naturally worry about the life they will likely experience because we care about them and we've learned enough to know their lives might be hard. It's normal to feel sadness when you see something ending that you've enjoyed, even if you know it's ending for the right reasons. So don't feel bad if you are experiencing joy and sadness at the same time. Life is complex: that's part of what makes it so much fun.

Yeah, it's kind of hard, isn't it? I am so overwhelmingly grateful that we were given this gift, and I knew all along that it would end, but it still is a melancholy happiness... I'm so excited about their flight - is there anything more right in the world than watching them take their place in nature? But the cameraderie of this site will be gone, and I mourn the loss of that. FB is great, but it really won't be the same. A unique time and experience - such a blessing - and my heart is full, but just a tiny bit of it is breaking...

I feel very blessed to be a part of this unique group.
There is a joy in our being together, a connectedness, that each of us contributes to and each of us holds a piece of in our hearts.
The whole is greater than the sum of the parts. May peace and joy be in your lives. I wish you enough.
My heart is full. Thank you all.With much love and affection, Kathleen

I am always like this, so I apologize in advance! I hope Wesley stays in the box a little while longer!!! She still doesn't seem ready to me. She doesn't fly around very much at all, and appears to need some maturity and some lessons in getting along in the world. Molly is still helping Max, et al. It seems this is an extraordinarily long process, and Wes has not been overly eager to venture out. I always want safety first!!! And, I want all four of these owls to be able to care for themselves.

Kodak, webshots, photobucket, etc - they all have services available to make mugs, calendars, tshirts, mousepads and other "stuff" from your own photo. I use cafePress because... well, I guess because I've used them before and know they do a great job. I have a mug made though that's been in the dishwasher several hundred times and still looks new. $15 for a small mug, $17 (I think) for a larger one. You pick what you want, upload a picture, see a picture of how it will look and confirm the order. $5.25 shipping/handling. Life is good. Click here to get directly to their "Make your own" mug page: CAFEPRESS. (I'm not affiliated with the company in any way. Lots of companies will make a mug with your own picture on it.)

I changed my mind about Bob Dog and Kyle. Kyle really should take the following role of "Corny"
Cornflake S. Pecially (aka "Corny") - The ingenious, quirky proprietor of a factory specializing in rocking chairs. His original factory burned down in a story during the first season, but his neighbors pitched in to help him build a new one. Corny has also been known to produce dolls, pretzels, model trolleys, and other goods, but stopped when he became overwhelmed and decided only to produce what he was able to distribute easily. He also apparently runs something of a hardware store out of the factory (X goes there to buy shovels and buckets in one episode).

James - your space organization are you able to tell us you own a WHOLE buncha of those AWESOME huge telescopes??? 😊 Our family stumbled upon a non-profit group in Rochester, MN with their scopes set up outside of some of the Mayo Clinic facilities (courtyard). ... AMAZING!!!! Truly a gift we happened upon them!!

Good morning from Arizona Chat Room Peeps - I was sad yesterday at the thought of Wesley leaving the owl box but today I am at peace with it for some reason. I guess because she seemed OK when I first checked early this am around 5:30. Looking at her in live feed on cell. No live feed on cell. It's been the same to everyone by taking great shots and providing comments. So I bid M&M, M, P, A & W a heartfelt adieu and will think of them daily knowing they are out there somewhere beginning new lives. It has been a great ride/light watching them and you know "Cee, wasn't that fun and I got to be a part of it" is so very true for me & part of that is because of you guys here. Take care and thanks for the 😊 and great knowledge!

Part 2 to above - Just this am I saw a young cottontail & said to it "be safe and may you live a great life for however as long as you can". I say the same to these Owls and Owlets as they move on too. None of us will know how they end up and maybe that is for the better & all we can do is just keep good thoughts for them. Just some of my thinking on this day when Wesley spends her first day in owl box all alone... The most important thing is that she learns to hunt for her own food and I hope that time is soon for her sake.

We don't know that Wesley hasn't been hunting, we just can't see the action out of camera range. We know the others have been flying some treats into Wesley, but I'm confident she's off hunting with the others now, too.

Has anyone here been checking the "grey seal camera"? If so have you ever seen seals? The only activity I have ever seen, was shortly after it was added to this site. There were 2 oystercatchers tending their eggs (on the beach). Two black backed gulls (twice the size of the oystercatchers) came and ate their eggs. The oystercatchers were going nuts, but could not scare off the gulls. Nature's way...but sad none the less.

Today, 08:53:55 - Flag - Like - Reply

JH (in Technicolor Dreamcoat)

I think starving gulls would be just the same - just as sad? Don't mean to sound like such a contrarian this morning but, all this talk of sad is really bugging me for some reason. I watched a black rat snake climb a small cedar and consume a baby bird the other day. Many here would have screamed and attacked the vicious snake. This winter I watched in awe as a hawk swooped in and took one of the song birds I had been feeding on the snow covered ground, in sub-freezing temps. I choose to see all life as equal in nature and can't imagine why others only want to have feelings for the cute and cuddly. I believe watching nest box cameras should enlighten people to the reality of nature and that means not taking sides in who prevails in the circle of life.

James, you should have been in my yard an hour ago when the kitten/cat caused quite a commotion with her first catch--a fledging blue jay that seemed the same size as the kitty. She upset one of my planters and spilled at the dirt. I laughed but also chased her to let the jay go. What a ruckus! So far she stays in our yard or very close by and comes when we call so we don't leave her out when we aren't home.

I thought she would stick to mice and smaller things, never thought I would see her with a jay in her jaws!

Why shocked? Nature is seldom rainbows and poppies. And many animals/insects only live long enough to procreate.

Why not be amazed instead? ...at how persistent and adaptable nature is, despite all the obstacles in the way.

Nature tends to make us needy humans appear to be the only sad ones, at times.

That said, yes, many of the hazards these owls face are somewhat avoidable. Think before throwing that apple core or banana peel out the window. Yes, it will decompose but it also attract rodents to the roadside, where hungry owls will likely hunt them. The owls don't get along with autos...

JH, it just seems that so much of the parent birds' lives are spent nurturing and feeding the babies, that they should have a longer lifespan. Of course if they are lucky enough to avoid cars, barbed wire, predators, etc, they will live longer. I pray for the best for "our" babies!

Another off-topk Space Ink, for those of us utilizing persuasive persuasions. I have been a member of the Galaxy Zoo Project for about three years (pretty inactive, lately). It's a brilliant program which utilizes the manpower behind the massive number of ordinary citizens who are interested/fascinated with Space. The program is designed to help narrow down the absolutely huge number of galaxies which scientists focus their efforts on for further study. You simply sign up, read a few instructions, then begin classifying space telescope images of galaxies by type. It's kind of nerdy, pretty uneventful, but always fascinating to look through the images and see the vast array of other solar systems out there. It's also nice to think you're doing some small part to better understand our Universe.

Check it out if you're a space nut - <http://www.galaxyzoo.org/>

Not pretending that I understand a lick of this, but here it is in case you are curious.
The "Answer" is simply "42". In the story, the Answer to the Ultimate Question about Life, the Universe, and Everything is produced using the hyper computer Deep Thought. It generated the Answer after a very long computation time (7.5 million years); however the computer's abilities proved insufficient when asked to provide the Ultimate Question to match the answer of 42. Thereafter, the answer given by Deep Thought prompts the protagonist to embark on a quest to discover the Question to which this is the Answer.

I'm learning as I go along. After Donna in Dallas' post I saw that it was a movie. I'm going to have to rent the movie... sorry not much time to read books.

I just posted this on Molly's FB page: "Seeing Wesley at home alone and reading a post about how fitting it is that we end the way we began with a lone female in the box touching a nerve. Saying good-bye to the owlets is going to be way harder than I expected. Thank you so much for this page." I am so old that drama is not me thing, but I just wanna say this was great fun and thanks. Take care.

How fitting to end as we began, a sole owl in the box! First it was Molly as she allowed us to observe the ways of the Barn Owl. And what an experience it has been, Molly, McGee, Max, Patison, Austin and Wesley! All would not have been possible if it wasn't for Carlos & Donna Royal. A heartfelt thank you to all, something this MOD will remember every time I hear an owl or even see that bunny in the yard. (Hope to nevery see a rat! If I do I will pray for a family of Barn Owls ASAP to come rescue me.) Thank you all fellow MOD twitters.
