                    nothing quite matches THIS OwlBox for owls, views, picture quality, color, and people. But it will be a reminder of the "good of days" and Molly et al.

                           Isn't that what it's called when groups start in on a song at different intervals?

                           Walked the dogs and was followed home by 4 deer, waiting for some attention fromme. I'm down south on vacation and where we are is a wildlife refuge, but it is a high traffic summer rental area. There are times I walk out and there are as many as 15 on the lawn. We don't have enough grass for the deer to graze on, but they have been pretty good about not eating the landscape. I can actually walk up to them and pet them and scratch between their ears. My red and white husky, Orion, pays no attention to them and will walk right through them without even boking at them. The young deer will actually try to play with him. Neat place to hang out.

OK, I'm set ting in for an evening with the owl(s). Ive answered a few questions over on the FB group page. Sorry for not getting to those sooner but my inbox has exploded in the last few days so I haven't been keeping up with everyone. Which brings me to a rather silly point. I've now received a few emails wondering why I have't "Liked" or commented on particular posts here. Yes, I've received emails asking me that. As hard as it may be to believe sometimes, I really don't read (or even see) every one of the posts here - even if I "Liked" something prior to and after a particular message. This isn't Jr. high, and I don't have a direct connection to my brain from the chat, so if I don't reply to an inquiry/compliment/condemnation, it simply means I didn't see it or take time to reply.
It doesn't mean that I have some vendetta against anyone. Capiche?

        I personally think too much "liking" goes on here anyway (and I'm an offender). Problemis, it really slows things down, and I'm sure it makes your work for us even more difficult, James-son. I'm trying to be more discreet about "liking"-- I know it's hard to do. I hope we've all been here long enough not to take it personally, though, if not everyone "likes" a comment we've made.

I'm afraid I'm guilty of "over-liking". I seklompost a "like" to some of the general chit chat. But, I do sometimes use "likes" as a marker to what I have already read when scrolling way down into the basement. And, I, too, have long stretched that I don't post because I didn't see it.

LMAO @ Lynda C. "Over-Liking" !!!!!!!! HA! I wonder if this connotation of the verb "like" will find its way into the dictionary, i.e., to "approve a blog posting". I recently said to my sister that someone on this site was so dear, because she always "liked" whatever I posted. LOL

Ive decided that, if I think I "should" do something because it seems like everyone else is and it's the thing to do, I won't do it unless I personally really feel the urge to. And, I try to remember that, you can't please everyone and it isn't our purpose in this life to do so. Please yourself, and if it also pleases others, so much the better. What is that song - "Accept Yourself"?, a nice, boppy little tune from the past?

thing so i'LL not. When i first came on this site, several people thought i was a agitator because i was trying to share info that i learned over at the barnowltrust uk site, about the mothers' drowning in cow troughs, i would of never guess, we had cow troughs on my aunt's farm when i was growing up

Then I wrote my first Haiku, I am a visual artist and really not that great with 'word painting', I had to count and count and make sure it was right ... when Someone said something about a Haiku and I told them I just posted my first ... no one saw, I did it several times and it got totally ignored! LOL! Then it hit me, everything was moving so darn fast! I think we were all watching McGee, private LeGGs McGee deliver food. I guess you had to be there ... and i would of never thought them to be a wildlife danger but they are ...

iposted i was off a word! Then no one noticed! • No one 'liked' iT...

I think this happened because, before he went to bed, we were talking about some of the things that are said on this chat room, and I mentioned that when the

So, in the middle of the night, he sits halfway up and yells: "She's jumping into the Tiber!"

Ok, there are two things I want to share before the song coming up in 15 min, and b4 it gets too crowded for my computer to keep up. I already have to refresh every ten min or so, more of ten if I post or click on pix and stuff. First, I catch myself at work editing documents and I amconstantly quick to move my cursor out of the center of the screen and off to the white margins! Like I've been cautioned to do here -- I do the same thing now while checking my e-mail!
Car, how did you get that lemmon to stick to your lovely, but terribly perturbed cat, long enough to take that photo???? THAT'S what I'll always be wondering.

We have cardinals, robins and sparrows nested here and there, but out back, there is a robin's nest no more than waist high in a young evergreen. It's protected on one side up against the house, and the other side by the back porch. We've watched it go from empty, to 3 blue eggs, to one, then two teeny bald-headed babes, which are now two week 1/2 old chicks. I peek carefully only after I've seen mama exit. She sits up in a nearby maple watching me the whole time. We are surrounded by miracles ©

      According to the chat someone suggested that that baby is significantly younger as apparently there was another that died and perhaps it wasn't the youngest but next to youngest so perhaps there is a larger age gap than normal. Not sure if that is the case. HE sure looks tiny compared to the others but they say he is eating and moving around.
       But he sure is a smidgen of an owl. I really am going to need rehab if I get hooked on this owl nest.

survived to adolescence. It made no sense, unless they were somehow poisoned by tainted prey.

Patricia, if you are referring to our owl family, Molly ate her first egg, so the first one and the last one did not produce an owlet.

I have to resist it.... I have to go back to my world somewhat....family has been so good ...but if I do it all again....might be trouble!!!! 😃

 A few candid shots of banding, measuring and testing two young eaglets in 2002 - about 2 weeks before they fledged. And interesting experience. One fellow climbed 100 ft. up into the top of one of the pines with climbing spikes and belt. One eaglet lowered at a time - work quickly done and hoisted carefully back to the nest. Both parents circled overhead and squealed, but quickly calmed down and returned to the nest a short time later. Both eaglets fledged successfully and thrilled us for a few weeks with their new-found talents at flying, diving and talon-holding in midair.

       As I mentioned below, measurements and weights were taken and blood and feather samples were taken which would be tested for presence of chemicals and heavy metals that may have come from their food (chief concern was fish as there is some mercury contamination in many of the Maine lakes due to acid rain and lead poisoning from lead sinkers which used to be used in fishing - but have been banned I believe).

       Neither one, Tip. My husband and I lived at a remote damwhere he was a damkeeper for a storage dam between 2 large lakes in Western Maine for 12 years. As part of a Federal licensure, all sorts of studies had to be done, wildlife, soil studies, archeological studies, plant surveys and just about any other "ologist" you could think of. Many of the wildlife biologists, archiologists and technicians stayed at one of the cabins on the dam property and we got to know them very well. I was pleased to be invited to participate in the eagle banding and to spend a night on the lake with them while they called loons to the boat and did the same type of testing. A definite learning experience

This really is incredible to watch. There is an eaglet web cam here that one of the local TV stations sponsors every year. This year, they did the banding too early and had to do it a second time because the younger two of three were too small to keep on/affix the tags. I kinda stopped watching them once I found Molly & the owlets, but did get to see both bandings broadcast live because of a friend in the office letting me know it was going on. I'm hoping I can talk her into going next year to see it in person. All three eaglets are male this year and branching/fledging now. They are 7-10 days older than

It is closer to more people. But Point Defiance Park Zoo also has a park and a barn owl. The barn owl there is used in the Wild Wonders Encounters at 12 and 3:30, plus at 1 pmon the 26th there will be a "Close Encounter" with a Barn Owl out at a certain location in the zoo. We would be able to be at that location and see the barn owl close up. So which sounds better to folks? I am torn, but I can make it to either one. If Woodland Park Zoo sounds better, that is fine. Then we just need to decide where to meet. We can reserve a picnic spot if we think that is necessary. Today, 16:55:09 - Flag - Like - Reply The Point Defiance Barn Owl thing sounds great! You've done some nice research. I vote for that, but, depending on my Merlins, may not be able to make it down there. Good evening everyone! My students said goodbye to Wesleigh today as they left the classroom for the summer. They shared all the "stuff" they learned from watching the owlets over the past 4 months. Biggest lesson they said they learned: how to get along with others and "be there" for each other like the owlets took care of one another. I'll miss my babies......and the owlets. Is your dog petrified of thunder or fireworks? Ours is and has done lots of damage during "panic attacks". She'd run around, like she was trying to figure out where she should be or what she should do. Once, in desperation, I put on her leash and attached her to my bed leg. She settled right down--does really well with the leash, for she knows where she's supposed to be. Maybe this hint will help some other poor dog with a tired owner! On another note, I'mgoing to miss

        I used to baby Merlin when he was scared. Then I saw a show on TV, the Dog Wisperer, or something, that it is better to act normal and ignore them. It was hard at first, but I did it, and Merlin is not as bad now. My cats...Angle hides in the closet, but Izzy and Sunny sleep right through the storms!

        you're right! We learned this too, from a dog trainer. Babying them reinforces that behavior. There are natural calming remedies to try, or a little want to go upstairs during a storm. He also has skin allergies in the summer. We were told to give him a Benedryl tablet 3 times a day for the itching. He Becky, they are banding the West End eagles tomorrow!!! I liked the site on fb, like with Lily the bear...so i get updates on them!!

        Elliot....that's immediatly thought of with our owls. Guess they were thinking one of the eaglettes was a girl and put him down as one, until the blood results came in!!!

If they do the same there as here in Maine, when they band them they also take several measurements of beak, head, etc.; they take blood samples and a feather sample which allows them to test for chemicals, heavy metals, etc. that might be coming from what they are being fed. When the banding and testing started here many years ago they were able to determine the biggest reason for the soft shell of the eggs which was causing them to break and eggs not hatching was DDT. I believe it was in Maine & New Hampshire that they then started a program of replacing these non-viable eggs with viable ones brough in from other states and putting them in some of the nests to be hatched by the nesting pair. The program worked quite successfully.

        Except West Nile proof. The first case of West Nile in Georgia was about two miles away from my house. We had a huge flock of 30-40 crows. Eight years later there are only about 10. Same thing happened to the blue jays. But -- 10 is a 100% gain on the 5 that we had only a couple of years ago!

                    Well I hope she gets busy. Parents are teaching the others to hunt. I don't want Wes to end up a zoo owl where the rat pizza is delivered! Thank you Carlos, and thanks to everyone contributing to the adventure with quips and knowledge, photos and prose. I've loved it all and shared it with many friends. Ah life

                    I had a friend that figured to inherit the house if they just stayed home forever. Perhaps welsley has figured out that this is a really good house and has decided to take out the mortgage on it < grin >. All she had to do was out wait everyone else.

I prefer to think that she is content! She knows she isn't ready, and she is enjoying the box. She'll go when she is ready. She's got that natural instinct. AND ... she's got a great hiding place for her treats. Plus, the siblings come back at night to play. Food is delivered. What a life! 😃 I wish Hi everybody, Oh my gosh, You will never guess what just happened! I just have to share it with people that will appreciate it.

                    I picked up my daughter from summer school and we were almost home when a bird shadow passed on the street in front of the car, and I thought wow that was a big crow, then my daughter yels "Mom, an owl!" I amsaying Where, Where as I amtrying to park the car with out hitting the curb so I can jump out and see the owl. IT landed in OUR tree. And there she was! A beautiful white faced speckle breasted barn owl stareing right at us, doing her head bobbing thing. I have heard them at night but have never seen one in person, wow it was amazing

Robin Don't know if anyone caught Wesley Anne's shenanigans this morning or not, but I caught some on my computer and the rest on my iPod Touch. It was a show and a half! I put themall together with a semblance of a timeline. One of the iPod screenshots recorded the time on it (in EDT). My computer captures automatically recorded the time, so I had that to go by

Hello all,
There was a chat in the basement about custom mouse pads (It seems Rite-Aid ran out of freebees). Zazzle makes mouse pads.
Husband is up and running around. He says his jaw is "a little sore." \, I do not know how he does it. When my wisdom teeth were carved out, I moaned from the couch for days.

In his words: Chocolate is a baby European Eagle Owl, aged just 6 weeks old in this collection of short video clips set to music. Chocolate is an 'ambassador' for the plight of endangered owls and for the work of the World Owl Trust. This video is just a bit of fun!

       I went to YouTube and watched Chocolate's Flight Lesson #1. It is too cute!!! He/she is a bobbin' and a weavin' and when he tries to fly, it boks as if he grew too fast and his body is to big for him to adjust yet. 🥹 It also looks to me as if he is wearing a "wooly helmut". 🚇 Thank you for sharing.
        What a BEAUTIFUL BIRD!!!

        On the other hand, there also can be an overflow of sugary sweetness exuding from this chatroom. Just sayin' - we have Smurf Patrol for exordizing negative spirits - maybe a "Gush Patrol" for excessive positivity? Nah, just kidding! I just happen to prefer a balanced scene, but I also know I can, if bothered by any of it, just turn off the chat for awhile and go off to other things. I enjoy. We all need to find our own ways of minimizing what we perceive as negative aspects of our lives. If changing up the times that you come into the chatroom works for you, then great! Now I'll "clam up"! Here's Making an avatar really is not difficult.

        1. Click on the grey silhouette across from Owl Box 2 (the little screen)
        2. A drop down menu will appear.
        3. I picked "Computer" for my source and grabbed a picture file that I had on the computer.

                    I've been watching the owls (and you) since sometime in April. I'mhere at least sometime everyday. Sometimes, watching you can be an interesting study in human behavior. I'm sure there are a lot of really nice people on here. But some of you can be so mean to newbies and make such rude comments about Carlos and about Stacy O'Brien. And I've seen a gang mentality on more than one occasion. Regarding Carlos and Stacy, I respect BOTH of them! Yes, that is possible! And that is exactly the reason I ve never posted here (until now). I didn't want to be attacked or made fun of or called a smurf just for making a comment or asking a question.

                           Call, you have a right to your opinion, but unless you were here when comments happened, because many of themwere actually deleted by the authors after making them and then you could read a blog by a person who has since taken down many of their vicious, vindictive comments, you would see a completely different picture. Again this is just my opinion but then I have been right in the middle of it and I will tell you one thing after reading a certain to see a person sling such mud, they have so much anger and negativity in them, it was really sad to see, but now we have to deal with the people from the dark side popping up here and there, and by the way i was attacked when i was a newbie because someone thought i was from the agitators. Funny

                          Call, don't buy everything at face value. People here think that they know everything that went on and I amsure that they don't. There has been so much disrespect of Stacey from this group that it is really annoying when they attempt to sway people against her. By saying "Oh, you just don't KNOW what happened" they can say whatever they want. The nasty comments continue here as does the defamation and name-calling of those of us who I think you are so right to respect both parties. There is a lot to be learned about owls and the owl box started my interest and now I'mlearning so, so much from Stacey and from others who frequent her blog - which is actually all about owls and other wildlife. Carlos has also learned from Stacey.

                           Oh, I do love children, they are wonderful and almost always more interesting than the population at large.
                           But I have a big problem with being a teacher - I'mafraid I'd quickly lose my gentle demeanor with the ID10T parents.
                          I'm certain that dealing with the adults would prove to be a night mare.
                           (and not only dealing directly with adults, but through some of their predous little snowflakes' learned behaviors)
